Different Approaches

Colonial Approach is influenced by the colonial ideology of domination. It focuses on criticism of indigenous society and culture, and praises the Western culture and values. James Mill, Vincent Smith, etc., followed this approach.

Nationalist Approach evolved as a response to and in confrontation with the colonial approach. Before independence, this school dealt with the ancient and medieval periods of Indian history, and not the modern period. After independence, this school focused on modern India. R.C. Majumdar and Tara Chand belonged to this school.

Marxist Approach focuses on the primary contradiction between the interests of the colonial masters and the native subjects. It also takes notice of the inner contradictions between the different sections of Indian society. R.P. Dutt and A.R. Desai were noted Marxist historians of India.

Subaltern Approach takes the position that the entire tradition of Indian historiography has an elitist bias and the role of the common masses has been neglected. Ranajit Guha belonged to this school.

Communalist Approach views Hindus and Muslims as permanently hostile groups whose interests are mutually different and antagonistic to each other.

Cambridge School envisages Indian nationalism as a product of conflicts among the Indians themselves for getting the benefits from the British rulers. For them, Indian nationalist leaders were inspired by the greed of power and material benefits.

Liberal and Neo-liberal Interpretations imply that the economic exploitation of the colonies was not beneficial to the people of Britain as it delayed the development of the 'new' industries in Britain.

Feminist Historiography focuses on areas of research that analyse colonial structures, such as the legal structure, which affected women's lives. It also focuses on women's vulnerability due to the denial of ownership of productive resources.

Advent of Europeans-

Why a Sea Route to India

(i) Spirit of renaissance in the 15th-century Europe

(ii) European economy growing rapidly, leading to prosperity and demand for luxury goods; increase in the supply of meat requiring spices for preservation

iii) Capture of Constantinople in 1453, and Syria and Egypt later by the Ottoman Turks calling for a new route to reach India without dealing with Arabs and Turks

(iv) Venice and Genoa too small to stand up to the Turks

(v) Spain and Portugal aided with money and men by the North Europeans and by ships and technical knowledge by the Genoese

(vi) The Portuguese the pioneers, followed by the Dutch, English, Danes, and the French respectively to reach India

The Portuguese

Vasco Da Gama discovered sea route to India in 1498. Vasco's second visit in 1502 led to the establishment of trading stations at Calicut, Cochin, and Cannanore.

Francisco de Almeida (1505–09) First governor, initiated the blue water policy (cartaze system).

Alfonso de Albuquerque (1509–1515) Considered to be the founder of the Portuguese power in India: captured Goa from Bijapur; persecuted Muslims; captured Bhatkal from Sri Krishna Deva Rai (1510) of Vijayanagara; and initiated the policy of marrying with the natives of India and banned the practice of sati in his area of influence.
Nino da Cunha (1529–38) shifted the capital from Cochin to Goa in 1530. In his rule, Diu and Bassein came under the Portuguese occupation from Gujarat King Bahadur Shah. Bahadur Shah got killed in 1537 at Diu while negotiating with the Portuguese.
Factors for Decline of the Portuguese in India
(a) Emergence of powerful dynasties in Egypt, Persia, and north India and the appearance of the Marathas as neighbours;
(b) political fears aroused by the activities of Jesuit missionaries, and hatred of persecution (such as inquisition) that caused reaction against Portuguese spiritual pressure;
(c) rise of the English and Dutch commercial ambitions challenging the Portuguese supremacy;
(d) rampant corruption, greed, and selfishness along with piracy and clandestine trade practices of the Portuguese administration in India;
(e) diversion of Portuguese colonising ambitions towards the West due to the discovery of Brazil.

The Dutch
(i) The United East India Company of the Netherlands (Verehgidge Oost Indische Compagnie), formed in March 1602 by the Charter of Dutch Parliament, had the powers to wage wars, make treaty, and build forts.
(ii) Dutch Factories in India Masulipatnam (1605), Pulicat (1610), Surat (1616), Bimlipatam (1641), Karikal (1645), Chinsurah (1653), Cassimbazar (Kasimbazar), Baranagore, Patna, Balasore, Nagapatam (1658), and Cochin (1663)
(iii) Decline in India The defeat of the Dutch in the Anglo-Dutch rivalry and the shifting of Dutch attention towards the Malay Archipelago
(iv) Battle of Bidara (1759) The English defeated the Dutch.

The English
Factors for Foundation Drake's voyage round the world, and English victory over the mighty Spanish Armada leading to great ambitions
Formation English East India Company was formed on December 31, 1600 by the charter issued by Queen Elizabeth I, which gave the company monopoly to trade in the East Indies for 15 years.
Settlements in India
(i) With Captain Thomas Best's victory over the Portuguese (1612), the English established their first factory at Surat (1613). Subsequently, Sir Thomas Roe secured permission from Jehangir to establish factories at Agra, Ahmedabad, and Broach.
(ii) Bombay came under the control of the Company, with Charles II (who received it as a part of the Portuguese dowry) leasing it out to the English Company for an annual rent of 10 pounds.
(iii) Madras with the Fort St. George replaced Masulipatnam as the English headquarters on the east coast, when the former was given by the Chandragiri chief to the English in 1639.
(iv) The city of Calcutta grew from the development of three villages Sutanuti, Gobindapur, and Kalikata secured from the Mughal governor of Bengal. The fortified settlement was named Fort William (1700), and it became the seat of British power in India till 1911.
Farrukhsiyar's Farmans In 1717, the Mughal Emperor Farrukhsiyar's farmans, called Magna Carta of the East India Company, gave significant privileges to the Company in Bengal, Gujarat, and Hyderabad.
Merger of Companies In 1635, a rival company named Courteen Association later called the Assada company, formed by Sir William Courteen, was given license to trade by Charles I. In 1657, both the companies merged. In 1698, another rival company emerged. In 1702, the rivalry between the old and the new company came to an end, but their final amalgamation took place in 1708 under the title 'The United Company of Merchants of England Trading to the East Indies', after the arbitration of the Earl of Godolphin. This Company ruled in India till 1858.

The French

Foundation In 1664, Colbert, a minister of Louis XIV, laid the foundations of Compagnie des Indes Orientales.

Settlements in India Pondicherry, developed as headquarters, was granted to Francois Martin, the director of Masulipatnam factory, by Valikondapuram governor Sher Khan Lodi in 1673. Finally incorporated into the Indian Union in 1954.

Anglo-French Rivalry in India The Anglo-French rivalry in India coincided with the wars between the English and French in Europe.

Causes ● For protection and expansion of commercial interests.

● Political developments in southern India and Europe provided pretexts to contest their claims which culminated in three Carnatic wars.

First Carnatic War (1740–48) It was an extension of the Anglo-French rivalry in Europe and ended in 1748 with the Treaty of Aix-La Chapelle.

Second Carnatic War (1749–54) Although inconclusive, it undermined the French power in South India vis-à-vis the English.

Third Carnatic War (1758–63) ● A decisive war, known for the Battle of Wandiwash (1760–61)

● An echo of the Anglo-French struggle in Europe

● By the Treaty of Paris (1763), the French were allowed to use Indian settlements for commercial purposes only and fortification of settlements were banned.

Causes of the French Failure ● Inadequate Military and Financial Support

● France's Involvement in Europe

● Ill-managed Policy of Imperial France

● Lack of Commercial Incentive to the French Company

● Sound Commercial Base of the English Company

Why English Succeeded against Other European Powers-

- Structure & Nature of Trading Companies
- Naval Superiority
- Industrial Revolution
- Military Skill & Discipline
- Stable Govt
- Lesser zeal for Religion
- Use of Debt Market

These battles changed the course of Indian history at different points of time.

● The first Battle of Panipat in 1526 was between Babur and Ibrahim Lodi. The result of the battle laid the foundation of the Mughal Empire by ending the rule of the Delhi Sultanate.

● The Second Battle of Panipat in 1556 was between Akbar and Hemu; it decided in favour of the continuation of the Mughal rule.

● The Third Battle of Panipat in 1761 between the Marathas and Ahmad Shah Abdali put an end to the Maratha ambition of ruling over India.

Why Panipat was a favourite battlefield

● Panipat had a strategic location. One of the parties of the war generally came from the north/northwest through the Khyber Pass to get hold over Delhi, the political capital of northern India. To move a military through rough terrains—deserts of Rajasthan or the other northern areas infested with dense forests—was very risky and difficult. On the other hand, the rulers at Delhi considered Panipat as a confrontable strategic ground and hence they preferred to take the fight there.

● Its proximity to Delhi made it easier for the Indian rulers to transport weapons, military, and food supplies, etc., to the battleground, and still keep the capital insulated from the conflict at hand.
● Panipat's surrounding region has a flat ground which was suitable for cavalry movement—the main mode of warfare at the time.
● After the construction of the Grand Trunk Road by Sher Sh Suri (1540–45), Panipat was on this route. It became easier for conquerors to find their way there.
● The duration of monsoon ra nfall in the region is short in comparison to other areas, making it easier to fight.
● The artisans/smiths of these regions were experts in making warfare-related materials, and, hence, it became easier for forces of both parties to replenish their war materials.

Challenges before the Mughals-

External Challenges-

Nadir Shah-Persian Emperor, attacked India in 1738-39, conquered Lahore, and defeated the Mughal army at Karnal on February 13, 1739. apart from the Peacock Throne and the Kohinoor diamond, seventy crore rupees were collected from the official treasury and the safes of the rich nobles.
Ahmad Shah Abdali/Durrani- invaded India several times between 1748 and 1767. In 1757, Abdali captured Delhi and left behind an Afghan caretaker to watch over the Mughal emperor. In 1761, Abdali defeated the Marathas in the Third Battle of Panipat.

Internal Challenge-

Bahadur Shah I(1707-1712)-Prince Mu'azzam at age of 63, Shah-i-Bekhabar title by Khafi Khan, Pacific policy with Marathas, Rajputs & jats.
Jahandar Shah(1712-1713)-Zulfikar Khan as PM, introduced izara system to improve the financial condition of the empire. Abolished Jaziya.
Farrukhsiyar(1713-1719)- policy of religious tolerance by abolishing Jaziya and pilgrimage tax. In 1719, the Sayyid brothers, with the help of Peshwa Balaji Vishwanath, dethroned Farrukhsiyar. Later, he was blinded and killed.
Rafl-ud-Darajat(Feb28-June 6, 1719)-Shortest period among Mughals.
Rafl-ud-Daula(Jun6-Sep17, 1719)-Opium addict, Shah Jahan II
Muhammad Shah(1719-1748)-Raushan Akhtar, Rangeela due to his luxurious lifestyle, killed Sayyid brothers, Nizam-ul-Mulk as Wazir(founded Hyderabad), In 1739, Nadir Shah defeated the Mughals in the Battle of Karnal and later imprisoned Muhammad Shah and annexed areas west of the Indus into the Persian empire.
Ahmad Shah Bahadur(1748-54)- left the state affairs in the hands of Udham Bai, the 'Queen Mother'. Udham Bai, given the title of Qibla-i-Alam, was a lady of poor intellect who ruled with the help of her paramour, Javid Khan (a notorious eunuch).
Alamgir II(1754-59)-Son of Jahandar Shah. Battle of Plassey during his reign, was assassinated
Shah Jahan III(1759-60)-Muhi-ul-millat
Shah Alam II(Oct 1760-Jul1788; Oct 1788-Nov 1806)-Third Battle of Panipat(1761)& Battle of Buxar(1764), became pensioner of English
Akbar Shah II(1806-1837)-Gave title RAJA to Rammohan Roy. During his reign in 1835, EIC discontinued calling itself subject of Mughal Emperor.
Bahadur Shah II/Zafar(1837-57)-Captured by British & sent to Rangoon where he died in 1862. In legal terms, the Mughal Empire came to an end on November 1, 1858 with the declaration of Queen Victoria.

Causes of Mughal's Downfall-

Some of the main causes for the decline of the Mughals, briefly put, were as follows:

(i) The govt of the Mughals was a personal despotism, and so its success depended on the character of the reigning ruler. The later Mughals were worthless and neglected the administration of the state.

(ii) With the absence of a definite law of succession, there always occurred a war of succession; this weakened the stability of the govt and fostered partisanship at the cost of patriotism.

(iii) The degeneration of the rulers led to the degeneration of the nobility, with factious quarrels and intrigues costing the empire heavily.

(iv) The deterioration of the army also proved disastrous for the empire.

(v) The empire had become too vast and unwieldy to be efficiently governed from a central authority under weak rulers, especially under the existing conditions of transport and communication.

(vi) Aurangzeb's religious policy was largely responsible for leading to revolts by Rajputs, Sikhs, Jats, and Marathas.

(vii) Aurangzeb's Deccan policy was a complete failure and was an important cause of the downfall of the Mughal empire.

(viii) Invasions of Irani and Durrani kingdoms gave a death blow to the Mughal empire.

(ix) During the reign of Aurangzeb itself, there was a marked increase in the power and influence of the zamindars. The biggest fallout of this was that regional loyalties were encouraged.

(x) Mutual rivalry, jealousy, and contest for power among the various groups of Jagirdars during the rule of the later Mughals (in the absence of a strong central leadership) not only reduced the prestige ofthe emperor but also contributed to the decline of the empire.

(xi) Rise of Regional States- (a) Successor States These were the Mughal provinces that turned into states after breaking away from the empire. Though they did not challenge the sovereignty of the Mughal ruler, the establishment of virtually independent and hereditary authority by their governors showed the emergence of autonomous polity in these territories. Some examples are Awadh, Bengal, and Hyderabad.

(b) Independent Kingdoms These states came into existence primarily due to the destabilisation of the Mughal control over the provinces, examples being Mysore and the Rajput states.

(c) The New States These were the states set up by the rebels against the Mughal empire, examples being the Maratha, the Sikh, and the Jat states.

Socio-Economic Conditions

Agriculture

- Stagnant and technologically backward agriculture, compensated by very hard labour of peasants
- Peasants paid revenues to state, zamindars, jagirdars, and revenue farmers.
- Major produce/crops: rice, wheat, sugar, pepper, spices, cotton, etc.

Trade and Industry

- Trade flourished. Cotton textiles, raw silk, silk fabrics, hardware, indigo, saltpetre, opium, rice, wheat, sugar, pepper, spices, precious stones, and drugs were exported.
- Gold, musk, woollen cloth, copper, iron, lead, paper, porcelain, pearls, dates, dried fruits, coffee, tea, ivory, rose water, etc., were imported.
- The textile industry was famous for its produce. The ship- building industry flourished. The metal industry was also well developed.

Education

- Elementary education imparted through pathshalas and maktabs
- Chatuspathis or Tols among Hindus, and Madrasahs among Muslims were the institutes of higher learning.
- Absence of the study of science and technology and geography was a general feature.

Society

- Apart from the four varnas, Hindus were divided into many sub-castes which differed in their nature from place to place
- Muslims were also divided by considerations of caste, race, tribe, and status, even though their religion propagated equality.

Art, Architecture, and Culture

- Asaf-ud-Daula, in 1784, built Bara Imambara at Lucknow.
- Sawai Jai Singh built pink city of Jaipur and five astronomical observatories (Delhi, Jaipur, Mathura, Benares, and Ujjain).
- Painting schools of Kangra and Rajputana came into prominence.
- In northern India, growth of Urdu language and poetry took place. Prominent Urdu poets were Mir, Sauda, Nazir, and Mirza Ghalib.
- Regional languages developed. Tamil language was enriched by Sittar poetry.

Survey of Regional Kingdoms-

Hyderabad-Kilich Khan, disgusted with the Mughal emperor who had appointed Mubariz Khan as a full-fledged viceroy of the Deccan, decided to fight Mubariz Khan. He defeated and later killed Mubariz Khan in the Battle of Shakr-Kheda (1724). He now assumed control of the Deccan. In 1725, he became the viceroy and conferred on himself the title of Asaf-Jah.

Awadh-Founder-Saadat Khan(Burhan-ul-Mulk), succeeded by Safdar Jang

Bengal-Founder-Murshid Kuli Khan, succeeded by his son Shuja-ud-din. His successor Sarfaraz Khan killled in 1940 by Alivardi Khan, who assumed power.

Rajputs-At one time, controlled entire territory extending from south of Delhi up to Western coast.

Mysore-Ruled by Wodeyars in 18th century, a constant battlefield, In the end, under rule of Haider Ali but involved in constant warfare with British & so was his son Tipu Sultan.

Kerala-Founder-Martanda Verma, Capital-Travancore, Boundaries-Kanyakumari to Cochin.

Jats-Under Suraj Mal, Jat Power reached its zenith. Territories from Ganga in the east to Chambal in the south and included the Subahs of Agra, Mathura, Meerut, and Aligarh.

Sikhs-In 1675, Aurangzeb arrested & executed 9th Sikh Guru, Guru Tegh Bahadur. Guru Gobind Singh openly rebelled against Aurangzeb, transformed the Sikhs into a militant sect in defence of their religion and liberties. Banda Bahadur, who later assumed the leadership of the Sikhs in 1708, was defeated and killed. In the wake of the invasions of Nadir Shah and Ahmad Shah Abdali, the Sikhs once again asserted their authority. At this stage, they organised themselves into 12 misls or confederacies which exercised control over different parts of the kingdom. The credit for estabing a strong kingdom of Punjab goes to Ranjit Singh. He was the son of Mahan Singh, the leader of the Sukarchakiya misl. Ranjit Singh brought under control the area extending from the Sutlej to the Jhelum. He conquered Lahore in 1799 and Amritsar in 1802. By the Treaty of Amritsar with the British, Ranjit Singh acknowledged the British right over the Cis-Sutlej territories. Ranjit Singh proved to be an efficient administrator. He greatly modernised his army with the help of Europeans. But towards the close of his reign, the English forced him to sign the Tripartite Treaty in 1838 with Shah Shuja and the English Company whereby he agreed to provide passage to the Brits troops through Pun with a view to placing Shah Shuja on the throne of Kabul. Ranjit Singh died in 1839. His successors could not keep the state intact, and, soon enough, the British took control over it.

Marathas-Most fromidable province, under leadership of Peshwas, uprooted Mughal authority from Malwa & Guj, challenged by ahmad shah Abdali. Most formidable challenge to English EIC.

Rohilakhand & Farukhabad-Ali Muhammad Khan took advantage of the collapse of authority in North India following Nadir Shah's invasion, to set up a petty kingdom, Rohilakhand. This was the area of the Himalayan foothills between Kumaon in the north and the Ganga in the south. Mohammad Khan Bangash, an Afghan, set up an independent kingdom to the east of Delhi in the area around Farrukhabad, during the reigns of Farrukhsiyar and Muhammad Shah.

Was the British Conquest Accidental or Intentional?

John Seeley leads the group which says that the British conquest of India was made blindly, unintentionally, and accidentally, and in a "fit of absent-mindedness". The English, it is argued, were unwillingly drawn into the political turmoil created by the Indians themselves and were almost forced to acquire territories.
The other group says that the British came to India with the clear intention of establishing a large and powerful empire, a plan which they completed by working on it bit by bit over the years. They dismiss as propaganda the claim of the peaceful intent and political neutrality of the English East India Company in its early days.
Initially, perhaps, the Company officials started acquiring territory just to promote and protect their trade interests, especially when they saw how factionalised the political situation was. But later on, the British politicians back in Britain and the administrators sent by them to India worked on a clear desire and plan to acquire territories and establish an empire.

Causes of British Success in India-

- Superior Arms, Military & Strategy
- Better Military Discipline & Regular Strategy
- Civil Discipline & Fair Selection System(Post not hereditary but based on skill)
- Brilliant Leadership(Clive, Warren Hastings, Elphinstone, Munro vs Haider Ali, Tipu Sultan, Chin Qilich Khan, Madhu Rao Scindia, and Yashwant Rao Holkar) & Support of Second-Line Leaders(Sir Eyre Coote, Lord Lake& Arthur Wellesly as Second line leaders, missing in case of India)
- Strong Financial Backup
- Nationalist Pride(weak, divided-amongst-themselves Indians)

British Conquest of Bengal-
Bengal on Eve of British Conquest-
Bengal, richest province of Mughal Empire. Nearly 60% of British imports from Asia consisted of goods from Bengal like saltpetre, rice, indigo, pepper, sugar, silk, cotton textiles, handicrafts, etc. The Company paid a sum of Rs 3,000 (£ 350) per annum to the Mughal emperor who allowed them to trade freely in Bengal. In contrast, the Company's exports from Bengal were worth more than £50,000 per annum. In 1700, Murshid Quli Khan became the Dewan of Bengal and ruled till his death in 1727. He was succeeded by his son-in-law, Shujauddin, who ruled till 1739. After that, for a year (1739–40), Sarfaraz Khan, an incapable son of Murshid Quli Khan, became the ruler; he was killed by Alivardi Khan. Alivardi Khan ruled till 1756 and also stopped paying tributes to the Mughal emperor. Under the rule of these rulers, Bengal made unprecedented progress. Almost all the governors of Bengal strongly resented the special privileges enjoyed by the English company as it meant a huge loss to the provincial exchequer. So, the friction between the English commercial interests and the Bengal govt became the chief cause for conflict between the two. During a short period between 1757 and 1765, the power gradually got transferred from the Nawabs of Bengal to the British, with the latter defeating the former.

Alivardi Khan & the English-Killed Nawab Sarfaraz Khan & became new Subahdar, ruled for 15 yrs. He was urged to expel Europeans from Bengal but died in 1756 & succeeded by Siraj-ud-Daulah.

Challenges b4 Siraj-ud-Daulah-Many internal problems. He defeated Shaukat Jang and killed him in a battle, divested Ghasiti Begum of her treasures and secured her, and dismissed Mir Jafar, appointing Mir Madan in his place. A Kashmiri officer, Mohan Lal, was appointed as the overall administrator, and he acted almost like a prime minister.

Battle of Plassey-
Prelude to the Battle- Officials of Company made rampant misuse of its trade privileges, fortified Calcutta, tried to mislead Siraj, suspected that Siraj would drastically reduce its trade privileged in colllusion with French & then Black hole Tragedy(imprisoned 146 in a tiny room,123 died of suffocation).
The Battle-Arrival of strong force under command of Clive, secret alliance with traitors of Nawab-Mir Jafar(to be made Nawab), Rai Durlabh, Jagat Seth (an influential banker of Bengal), and Omichand. Siraj was defeated, captured & murdered. This placed at the disposal of the English vast resources of Bengal. After Plassey, the English virtually monopolised the trade and commerce of Bengal.
Significance-Mir Jafar became Nawab, gave large sums of money plus zamindari of 24 parganas to English, laid foundation of British empire in India, established military supremacy of English in Bengal, no apparent change in govt though supreme ctrl of affairs passed to Clive.

Mir Kasim & Treaty of 1760-Mir Jafar enterd into conspiracy with Dutch at Chinsura. But Dutch were defeated at Bedara in Nov 1759. Trachery annoyed British. Miran, son of Mir jafar died. Fight for Nawabship b/w son of Miran and son-in-law of Mir Jafar, Mir Kasim.Treaty b/w Mir Kasim & Company signed in 1760:
(i) Mir Kasim agreed to cede to the Company the districts of Burdwan, Midnapur, and Chittagong.
(ii) The Company would get half of the share in chunam trade of Sylhet.
(iii) Mir Kasim agreed to pay off the outstanding dues to the Company.
(iv) Mir Kasim promised to pay a sum of five lakh rupees towards financing the Company's war efforts in southern India.
(v) It was agreed that Mir Kasim's enemies were the Company's enemies, and his friends, the Company's friends.
(vi) It was agreed that tenants of the nawab's territory would not be allowed to settle in the lands of the Company, and vice-versa.
Under the pressure of the Company, Mir Jafar decided to resign in favour of Mir Kasim. A pension of Rs 1,500 per annum was fixed for Mir Jafar.
Steps taken by Mir Kasim-Shifted the capital from Murshidabad to Munger in Bihar, to allow a safe distance from the Company at Calcutta. reorganising the bureaucracy with the men of his own choice and remodelling the army to enhance its skill and efficiency.

Battle of Buxar-
Prelude to the Battle-Mir Kasim belied expectations of company. Ram Narayan, the deputy governor of Bihar, was defiant against Kasim. Misuse of trade permit by Company's officials, thus loss of tax revenue to Nawab. The Nawab-Company tussle over transit duty led to the outbreak of wars b/w the English and Mir Kasim in 1763. The English gained successive victories at Katwah, Murshidabad, Giria, Sooty, and Munger. Mir Kasim fled to Awadh (or Oudh) and formed a confederacy with the Nawab of Awadh, Shuja-ud-Daulah, and the Mughal Emperor, Shah Alam II, with a view to recover Bengal from the English.

The Battle-The combined armies of Mir Kasim, the Nawab of Awadh, and Shah Alam II were defeated by the English forces under Major Hector Munro at Buxar on October 22, 1764 in aclosely contested battle. The victory made the English a great power in northern India and contenders for the supremacy over the whole country. After the battle, Mir Jafar, who was made Nawab in 1763 when relations between Mir Kasim and the Company became strained, agreed to hand over the districts of Midnapore, Burdwan, and Chittagong to the English for the maintenance of their army. The English were also permitted duty-free trade in Bengal, except for a duty of 2 per cent on salt. After the death of Mir Jafar, his minor son, Najimud-daula, was appointed nawab, but the real power of administration lay in the hands of the naib-subahdar, who could be appointed or dismissed by the English.
The Treaty of Allahabad-Robert Clive concluded two important treaties at Allahabad in August 1765—one with the Nawab of Awadh and the other with the Mughal Emperor, Shah Alam II.
Nawab Shuja-ud-Daula agreed to:
(i) surrender Allahabad and Kara to Emperor Shah Alam II;
(ii) pay Rs 50 lakh to the Company as war indemnity; and
(iii) give Balwant Singh, Zamindar of Banaras, full possession of his estate.
Shah Alam II agreed to:
(i) reside at Allahabad, to be ceded to him by the Nawab of Awadh, under the Company's protection;
(ii) issue a farman granting the diwani of Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa to the East India Company in lieu of an annual payment of Rs 26 lakh; and
(iii) a provision of Rs 53 lakh to the Company in return for nizamat functions (military defence, police, and administration of justice) of the said provinces. The treaty made the Nawab a firm friend of the Company, and turned Awadh into a buffer state. Similarly, Clive's arrangement with Shah Alam II was inspired by practical considerations. It made the emperor a useful 'rubber stamp' of the Company.

Dual Govt in Bengal(1765-72)- Robert Clive introduced the dual system of govt, i.e., the rule of the two—the Company and the Nawab—in Bengal in which both the diwani, i.e., collecting revenues, and nizamat, i.e., police and judicial functions, came under the control of the Company. The Company exercised diwani rights as the diwan and the nizamat rights through its right to nominate the deputy subahdar. The Company acquired the diwani functions from the emperor and nizamat functions from the subahdar of Bengal. The dual system led to an administrative breakdown and proved disastrous for the people of Bengal. Neither the Company nor the Nawab cared for administration and public welfare. Warren Hastings did away with the dual system in 1772.

Clive was not a founder but a harbinger of the future. He was not a planner of empire but an experimenter who revealed something of the possibilities. Clive was the forerunner of the British Empire.

—Percival Spear

Mysore's Resistance to the Company-
The Wodeyar/Mysore Dynasty-After the battle of Talikota (1565) gave a deadly blow to the great kingdom of Vijayanagara, many small kingdoms emerged from its remnants. In 1612 a Hindu kingdom under the Wodeyars emerged in the region of Mysore. Chikka Krishnaraja Wodeyar II ruled from 1734 to 1766. During the second half of the 18th century, Mysore emerged as a formidable power under the leadership of Haidar Ali and Tipu Sultan. The English felt their political and commercial interests in South India was threatened because of Mysore's proximity with the French and Haidar Ali and Tipu's control over the rich trade of the Malabar Coast. Mysore's power was also seen as a threat to the control of the English over Madras.
Rise of Haider Ali- Due to Repeated incursions of the Marathas and of the Nizam's troops Mysore became financially and politically weak. Haider Ali became de facto ruler of Mysore in 1761. Haidar Ali took the help of the French to set up an arms factory at Dindigul (now in Tamil Nadu), and also introduced Western methods of training for his army. He also started to use his considerable diplomatic skill to outmanoeuvre his opponents. With his superior military skill, he captured Dod Ballapur, Sera, Bednur, and Hoskote in 1761–63. the Marathas under Madhavrao attacked Mysore, and defeated Haidar Ali in 1764, 1766, and 1771. after Madhavrao's death in 1772, Haidar Ali raided the Marathas a number of times during 1774–76 and recovered all the territories he had previously lost, besides capturing new areas.

First Anglo-Mysore War(1767-69)-

Background-English concluded a treaty with Nizam of Hyderabad(1766), persuading him to give them the Northern Circars (region) in lieu of which they said they would protect the Nizam from Haidar Ali. Haidar already had territorial disputes with the Nawab of Arcot and differences with the Marathas. The Nizam, the Marathas, and the English allied together against Haidar Ali. Haider paid Marathas to stay neutral, converted Nizam inti his ally and attacked Nawab of Arcot.

Course of War-Haider won, Treaty of Madras on Apr 4,1769 which provided for the exchange of prisoners and mutual restitution of conquests. Haidar Ali was promised the help of the English in case he was attacked by any other power.

Second Anglo-Mysore War(1780-84)-

Background-Marathas attacked Mysore in 1771, English did not came to aid, French more helpful, concern to English as French were against English in America. English tried to capture Mahe, Haider considered it as direct challenge to his authority.

Course of War- Haider alliance with Marathas & Nizam, attcked Carnatic, captured Arcot, defeated English army in 1781,English detached Maratha & Nizam from Haider's side, defeated Haider at Porto Novo in Nov 1781, he regrouped & defeated English and captured commander, Braithwaite.

Treaty of Mangalore(1784)-Haider died in Dec7,1782, Tipu carried war for 1 yr. Fed up with inconclusive war, both sides opted for peace,negotiation, each party gave back the territories it had taken from the other.

Third Anglo-Mysore War-

Background-War b/w Tipu & Travancore in Apr 1790 over purchase of Jalkottal & Cannanore from Dutch in Cochin State.

Course of War-English, siding with Travancore attacked Tipu. In 1790, Tipu defeated the English under General Meadows. In 1791, Cornwallis took the leadership and at the head of a large army marched through Ambur and Vellore to Bangalore (captured in March 1791) and from there to Seringapatam. Coimbatore fell to them, but they lost it again, and at last with the support of the Marathas and the Nizam, the English attacked Seringapatam for the second time. Tipu offered serious opposition, but the odds were against him. Consequently, he had to pay heavily under the Treaty of Seringapatam.

Treaty of Seringapatam- Under this treaty of 1792, nearly half of the Mysorean territory was taken over by the victors. Baramahal, Dindigul, and Malabar went to the English, while the Marathas got the regions surrounding the Tungabhadra and its tributaries and the Nizam acquired the areas from the Krishna to beyond the Pennar. Besides, a war damage of three crore rupees was also taken from Tipu.

Fourth Anglo-Mysore War-

Background- In 1796, when the Hindu ruler of Wodeyar dynasty died, Tipu refused to place Wodeyar's minor son on the throne and declared himself sultan. Wellesley chargesheet against Tipu for trachery.

Course of war(Apr17,1799-May4,1799)- Tipu was defeated first by English General Stuart and then by General Harris. English wer helped by Marathas & Nizam. Tipu laid down his life fighting bravely; his family members were interned at Vellore, and his treasures were confiscated by the English. The English chose a boy from the earlier Hindu royal family of Mysore as the maharaja and also imposed on him the subsidiary alliance system.

Mysore After Tipu-

● Wellesley offered Soonda and Harponelly districts of Mysore Kingdom to the Marathas, which the latter refused.
● The Nizam was given the districts of Gooty and Gurramkonda.
● The English took possession of Kanara, Wynad, Coimbatore, Dwaraporam, and Seringapatam.
● The new state of Mysore was handed over to the old Hindu dynasty (Wodeyars) under a minor ruler Krishnaraja III, who accepted the subsidiary alliance.
● In 1831, William Bentinck took control of Mysore on grounds of misgovernance.
● In 1881, Lord Ripon restored the kingdom to its ruler.

Anglo-Maratha Struggle for Supremacy-

Rise of Marathas-By the middle of the 18th century, they were in Lahore thinking of becoming rulers of the North Indian empire and in the court of the Mughals playing the role of kingmakers. The Maratha families which emerged prominent were: (i) the Gaekwad of Baroda; (ii) the Bhonsle of Nagpur; (iii) the Holkars of Indore; (iv) the Sindhias of Gwalior; and (v) the Peshwa of Poona.
The confederacy, under Bajirao I to Madhavrao I, worked cordially but the Third Battle of Panipat (1761) changed everything. The defeat at Panipat and later the death of the young Peshwa, Madhavrao I, in 1772, weakened the control of the Peshwas over the confederacy. Though the chiefs of the confederacy united on occasion, as against the British (1775–82), more often they quarrelled among themselves.

First Anglo-Maratha War(1775-82)-

Background-Madhavrao died in 1772, Narayanrao, is brother succeeded him as 5th Peshwa, was assasinated by uncle, Raghunathrao, NR's widow, Gangabai gave birth to Sawai Madhavrao(legally the next Peshwa), 12 Maratha chiefs led by Nana Phadnavis made effort to name infant as new Peshwa. Raghunathrao sought help from English & signed Treaty of Surat(1775)-ceded territories of Salsette & bassein to English along with a portion of the revenues from Surat and Bharuch districts. In return, the English were to provide Raghunathrao with 2,500 soldiers. British Calcutta Council, condemned Treaty of Surat& sent Colonel Upton to annul it and make a new Treaty (Treaty of Purandhar,1776) with the regency renouncing Raghunath and promising him a pension.

Course of War-English & Marathas met on outskirts of Pune. Mahadji lured the English army into the ghats (mountain passes) near Talegaon and trapped the English from all sides and attacked the English supply base at Khopali. The Marathas also utilised a scorched earth policy, burning farmland and poisoning wells. As the English began to withdraw to Talegaon, the Marathas attacked, forcing them to retreat to the village of Wadgaon. Here, the English army was surrounded on all sides by the Marathas and cut off from food and water supplies. The English surrendered by mid-January 1779 and signed the Treaty of Wadgaon that forced the Bombay govt to relinquish all territories acquired by the English since 1775.

Treaty of Salbai(1782)-Hastings rejected Treaty of Wadgaon & sent troops whcih captured Ahmedabad in Feb 1779, Bassein in Dec 1780, Gwalior in Aug 1780 & finally defeated Sindhia at Sipri in Feb 1781. Treaty of Salbai signed in May 1782. Main provisions:
(i) Salsette should continue in the possession of the English.
(ii) The whole of the territory conquered since the Treaty of Purandhar (1776), including Bassein, should be restored to the Marathas.
(iii) In Gujarat, Fateh Singh Gaekwad should remain in possession of the territory which he had before the war and should serve the Peshwa as before.
(iv) The English should not offer any further support to Raghunathrao and the Peshwa should grant him a maintenance allowance.
(v) Haidar Ali should return all the territory taken from the English and the Nawab of Arcot.
(vi) The English should enjoy the privileges at trade as before.
(vii) The Peshwa should not support any other European nation.

(viii) The Peshwa and the English should undertake that their several allies should remain at peace with one another.
(ix) Mahadji Scindia should be the mutual guarantor for the proper observance of the terms of the treaty.

Second Anglo-Maratha War(1803-1805)-
Background-After death of Peshwa Madhavrao Narayan in 1795, Bajirao II became Peshwa. Nana Phadnavis, a bitter foe of Bajirao II, became CM. Dissensions among Marathas provided English with an opportunity to intervene in Maratha affairs. Death of Nana in 1800 gave an added advantage.
Course of War-Peshwa brutally murdered brother of Jaswantrao Holkar, Vithuji.Furious Jaswant defeated the armies of the Peshwa and Scindia decisively at Hadapsar near Poona and placed Vinayakrao, son of Amritrao, on the Peshwa's seat. Bajirao II fled to Bassein where, on Dec 31, 1802, he signed a treaty with the English.
Treaty of Bassein(1802)- Under the treaty, the Peshwa agreed:
(i) to receive from the Company a native infantry (consisting of not less than 6,000 troops), with the usual proportion of field artillery and European artillery men attached, to be permanently stationed in his territories;
(ii) to cede to the Company territories yielding an income of Rs 26 lakh;
(iii) to surrender the city of Surat;
(iv) to give up all claims for chauth on the Nizam's dominions;
(v) to accept the Company's arbitration in all differences between him and the Nizam or the Gaekwad;
(vi) not to keep in his employment Europeans of any nation at war with the English; and
(vii) to subject his relations with other states to the control of the English.
After the Peshwa accepted the subsidiary alliance, Scindia and Bhonsle attempted to save Maratha independence. But the well-prepared and organised army of the English under Arthur Wellesley defeated the combined armies of Scindia and Bhonsle and forced them to conclude separate subsidiary treaties with the English. The Marathas were defeated, reduced to British vassalage and isolated from one another. [(i) Defeat of Bhonsle (December 17, 1803, Treaty of Deogaon); (ii) Defeat of Scindia (December 30, 1803, Treaty of Surji-Anjangaon); and (iii) Defeat of Holkar (1806, Treaty of Rajpurghat)].
Significance-Immense gains to English. The Company already had troops in Mysore, Hyderabad, and Lucknow. The addition of Poona on the list meant that the Company's troops were now more evenly spread and could be rushed to any place without much delay in times of need. In the circumstances, the observation that the treaty "gave the English the key to India," may be exaggerated, but appears understandable.

Third Anglo-Maratha War(1817-1819)-
Background-Company needed more mkts after Charter act of 1813. Pindaris plunderingneighboring territories, including that of Company. Lord Hastings action against Pindaris were seen as a transgression of sovereignty of Marathas. Maratha leaders thought treaty of Bassein as an absolute surrender of independence. Bajirao II made a last bid in 1817 by rallying together the Maratha chiefs against the English in course of the Third Anglo-Maratha War.
Course of War-Peshwa attacked British Residency at Poona, Appa Sahib of Nagpur at Nagpur & Holkar made preparations for war but political and administrative conditions of all the Maratha states were confused and inefficient. After the death of Jaswantrao Holkar, Tulsi Bai, the Holkar's favourite mistress, came to the helm of affairs in Poona. she could not administer the state properly The Bhonsle at Nagpur and the Scindia at Gwalior had also become weak. So, the English, striking back vigorously, succeeded in not allowing the Peshwa to exert his authority again on the Maratha confederacy.
Result-The Peshwa was defeated at Khirki, Bhonsle at Sitabuldi, and Holkar at Mahidpur.

Some important treaties were signed. These were:

- June 1817, Treaty of Poona, with Peshwa.
- November 1817, Treaty of Gwalior, with Scindia.
- January 1818, Treaty of Mandasor, with Holkar.

In June 1818, the Peshwa finally surrendered and the Maratha confederacy was dissolved. The peshwaship was abolished. Peshwa Bajirao became a British retainer at Bithur near Kanpur. Pratap Singh, a lineal descendant of Shivaji, was made ruler of a small principality, Satara, formed out of the Peshwa's dominions.

Reasons for loss of Marathas-

- Inept Leadership of later Maratha leaders
- Defective nature of Maratha State(no effort, right from the days of Shivaji, for a well-thought-out
- organised communal improvement, spread of education, or unification of the people)
- Loose political Setup(The lack of a cooperative spirit among the Maratha chiefs proved detrimental to the Maratha state.)
- Inferior Military System
- Unstable Economic Policy(no industries or foreign trade openings)
- Superior English Diplomacy & Espionage
- Progressive English Outlook

Conquest of Sindh-

Rise of Talpuras Amirs-earlier ruled by Kallora chiefs. In 1770s, a Baluch tribe called Talpuras, descended from hills & settled in plains of Sindh. In 1783, under leadership of Mir Fatah Ali Khan, established complete hold over Sindh & sent Kallora prince into exile. Mir Fath Ali Khan shared the country with his brothers , popularly k/a Char Yar, who called themselves Amirs or Lords of Sindh. These amirs extended their dominion on all sides. They conquered Amarkot from the Raja of Jodhpur, Karachi from the chief of Luz, and Shaikarpur and Bukkar from the Afghans. Under the influence of Tipu Sultan and the jealousy of the local traders, aided by the anti-British party at Hyderabad (Sindh),the amir in October 1800, ordered the British agent to quit Sindh within ten days. British wanted to create a barrier between Russia and British India. Amirs agreed to a treaty—their first-ever treaty with the English. After professing eternal friendship, both sides agreed to exclude the French from Sindh and to exchange agents at each other's court.

Treaty of 1832-In 1832, William Bentinck sent Colonel Pottinger to Sindh to sign a treaty with the Amirs. The provisions of the treaty were as follows:

(i) Free passage through Sindh would be allowed to the English traders and travellers and the use of Indus for trading purposes; however, no warships would ply, nor any materials for war would be carried.

(ii) No English merchant would settle down in Sindh, and passports would be needed for travellers.

(iii) Tariff rates could be altered by the Amirs if found high and no military dues or tolls would be demanded.

(iv) The Amirs would work with the Raja of Jodhpur to put down the robbers of Kachch.

(v) The old treaties were confirmed and the parties would not be jealous of each other.

Lord Auckland & Sindh-Lord Auckland, Gov. Gen. In 1836, looked at Sindh from the perspective of saving India from a possible Russian invasion. The Amirs initially refused but later agreed reluctantly to sign the treaty in 1838 when the possibility of Ranjit Singh getting help from others was pointed out to them. The treaty permitted the English to intervene in the disputes between the Amirs and the Sikhs as also to establish the presence of a British resident who could go anywhere he liked escorted by English troops. Thus, Sindh was turned into a British protectorate in 1838.

Tripartite Treaty of 1838-To address the Afghan problem (as the British imagined it), the Company resorted to further duplicity. Firstly, they persuaded Ranjit Singh to sign a tripartite treaty in June 1838 agreeing to British mediation in his disputes with the Amirs, and then made Emperor Shah Shuja give up his sovereign rights on Sindh, provided the arrears of tribute were paid.

Sindh accepts Subsidiary Alliance(1839)- Under threat of superior force, the Amirs accepted a treaty in February 1839 by which a British subsidiary force had to be stationed at Shikarpur and Bukkar and the Amirs of Sindh were to pay Rs 3 lakh annually for the maintenance of the Company's troops. In 1843, under Governor General Ellenborough, Sindh was merged into the British Empire and Charles Napier was appointed its first governor.

Conquest of Punjab
Consolidation of Punjab under Sikhs-After murder of Guru Gobind Singh, Sikhs revoted against Mughals under Banda Bahadur. In 1715, BB defeated by Farrukhsiyar. Sikh polity became leaderless. In 1784, Kapur Singh Faizullapuria organised the Sikhs under Dal Khalsa, with the objective of uniting followers of Sikhism, politically, culturally, and economically. The weakness of the Mughals and invasions of Ahmad Shah Abdali created a general confusion and anarchy in Punjab. These political conditions helped the organised Dal Khalsa to consolidate further. The Sikhs consolidated in misl.
Sukarchakiya Misl & Ranjit Singh-12 important misls—Ahluwaliya, Bhangi, Dallewalia, Faizullapuria, Kanhaiya, Krorasinghia, Nakkai, Nishaniya, Phulakiya, Ramgarhiya Sukharchakiya, and Shaheed. Ranjit Singh was the son of Mahan Singh, the leader of the Sukarchakiya misl. Ranjit Singh, who followed a ruthless policy of 'blood and iron' and carved out for himself a kingdom in the central Punjab. In 1799, Ranjit Singh was appointed as the governor of Lahore by Zaman Shah, the ruler of Afghanistan. In 1805, Ranjit Singh acquired Jammu and Amritsar, and, thus, the political capital (Lahore) and religious capital (Amritsar) of Punjab came under the rule of Ranjit Singh. He also maintained good relations with the Dogras and the Nepalese and enlisted them in his army.
Ranjit Singh & the English- In the scenario in which Napoleonic danger receded, English became more assertive, Ranjit Singh agreed to sign Treaty of Amritsar(Apr 25, 1809).
Treaty of Amritsar-Checked ambitions of Ranjit Singh to extend across river sutlej. In Jun 1838, he was compelled by political compulsions to sign Tripartite Treaty with English.

Punjab After Ranjit Singh
Beginning of Court Factions-R.S's successor Kharak Singh was not efficient, court factions became active. Army became weak, allowed marching of English troops through its territory which resulted in commotion & economic dislocation in Pun.
Rani Jindal & Daleep Singh-Daleep Singh, a minor son of Ranjit Singh, was proclaimed the Maharaja with Rani Jindan as regent and Hira Singh Dogra as wazir.

First Anglo-Sikh War(1845-46)-
Causes-(i)Sikh army crossing Sutlej on Dec 11, 1845
(ii) the anarchy in the Lahore kingdom following the death of Maharaja Ranjit Singh resulting in a power struggle for domination between the court at Lahore and the ever-powerful and increasingly local army;
(iii) suspicions amongst the Sikh army arising from English military campaigns to achieve the annexation of Gwalior and Sindh in 1841 and the campaign in Afghanistan in 1842; and
(iv) the increase in the number of English troops being stationed near the border with the Lahore kingdom.
Course of War-The war began in December 1845, with 20,000 to 30,000 troops in the British side, while the Sikhs had about 50,000 men under the overall command of Lal Singh. But the treachery of Lal Singh and Teja Singh caused five successive defeats to the Sikhs at Mudki (December 18, 1845), Ferozeshah (December 21–22, 1845), Buddelwal, Aliwal (January 28, 1846), and at Sobraon (February 10, 1846). Lahore fell to the British forces on February 20, 1846 without a fight.
Treaty of Lahore(Mar 8,1846)- The end of the first Anglo-Sikh War forced the Sikhs to sign a humiliating treaty on March 8, 1846. The main features of the Treaty of Lahore were as follows:

● War indemnity of more than 1 crore rupees was to be given to the English.
● The Jalandhar Doab (between the Beas and the Sutlej) was annexed to the Company's dominions.
● A British resident was to be established at Lahore under Henry Lawrence.
● The strength of the Sikh army was reduced.
● Daleep Singh was recognised as the ruler under Rani Jindan as regent and Lal Singh as wazir.
● Since the Sikhs were not able to pay the entire war indemnity, Kashmir, including Jammu, was sold to Gulab Singh and he was required to pay 75 lakh rupees to the Company as the price. The transfer of Kashmir to Gulab Singh was formalised by a separate treaty on March 16, 1846.

Treaty of Bhairowal The Sikhs were not satisfied with the Treaty of Lahore over the issue of Kashmir, so they rebelled. In December, 1846, the Treaty of Bhairowal was signed. According to the provisions of this treaty, Rani Jindan was removed as regent and a council of regency for Punjab was set up. The council consisted of 8 Sikh sardars presided over by the English Resident, Henry Lawrence.

Second Anglo-Sikh War(1848-49)-

Causes-Resentment of Sikhs due to defeat in first anglo-sikh war, mass uprising in Multan, Dalhousie got pretext to annex Punjab completely.

Course of War-Three important battles were fought before the final annexation of Punjab.
These three battles were:
(i) Battle of Ramnagar, led by Sir Hugh Gough, the commander-in-chief of the Company
(ii) Battle of Chillhanwala, January, 1849
(iii) Battle of Gujarat, February 21, 1849; the Sikh army surrendered at Rawalpindi, and their Afghan allies were chased out of India. (Gujarat is a small town on the banks of River Jhelum.)

Result-At the end of the war came:

● surrender of the Sikh army and Sher Singh in 1849;
● annexation of Punjab; and for his services the Earl of Dalhousie was given the thanks of the British Parliament and a promotion in the peerage, as Marquess;
● setting up of a thre -member board to govern Punjab, comprising of the Lawrence brothers (Henry and John) and Charles Mansel.

In 1853, the board was nullified and Punjab was placed under a chief commissioner. John Lawrence became the first chief commissioner.

Extension of British Paramountcy Through Administrative Policy-

The Policy of Ring-Fence(Wellesley)- creating buffer zones to defend the Company's frontiers. the policy of defence of their neighbours' frontiers for safeguarding their own territories. The chief danger to the Company's territories was from the Afghan invaders and the Marathas. To safeguard against these dangers, the Company undertook to organise the defence of the frontiers of Awadh on the condition that the Nawab would defray the expenses of the defending army. Wellesley's policy of subsidiary alliance was, in fact, an extension of the ring-fence system.

Subsidiary Alliance(Wellesley)- the allying Indian state's ruler was compelled to accept the permanent stationing of a British force within his territory and to pay a subsidy for its maintenance. The Indian ruler had to agree to the posting of a British resident in his court. The Indian ruler could not employ any European in his service without the prior consultation with the Company. Nor could he go to war or negotiate with any other Indian ruler without consulting the governor general. In return for all this, the British would defend the ruler from his enemies and adopt a policy of non interference in the internal matters of the allied state. The Indian rulers lost their independence by buying security. They were not free of interference from the British Resident. They lost much of their revenue, paying for the British troops.

Evolution & Perfection-It was probably Dupleix, who first gave on hire (so to say) European troops to Indian rulers to fight their wars. The first Indian state to fall into this protection trap (which anticipated the subsidiary alliance system) was Awadh, in 1765. It was Wellesley's genius to make it a general rule to negotiate for the surrender of territory in full sovereignty for the maintenance of the subsidiary force.

Stages of Application of Subsidiary Alliance-In the first stage, the Company offered to help a friendly Indian state with its troops to fight any war the state might be engaged in. The second stage consisted of making a common cause with the Indian state now made friendly and taking the field with its own soldiers and those of the state. Now came the third stage when the Indian ally was asked not for men but for money. In return, the Company promised that it would recruit, train, and maintain a fixed number of soldiers under British officers, and that the contingent would be available to the ruler for his personal protection as also for keeping out aggressors. In the fourth or the last stage, the money or the protection fee was fixed, usually at a high level; when the state failed to pay the money in time, it was asked to cede certain parts of its territories to the Company in lieu of payment.
States which accepted Alliance-The Nizam of Hyderabad (September 1798 and 1800), the ruler of Mysore (1799), the ruler of Tanjore (October 1799), the Nawab of Awadh (November 1801), the Peshwa (December 1801), the Bhonsle Raja of Berar (December 1803), the Scindia (February 1804), the Rajput states of Jodhpur, Jaipur, Macheri, Bundi, and the ruler of Bharatpur (1818). The Holkars were the last Maratha confederation to accept the Subsidiary Alliance in 1818.

Doctorine of Lapse-In simple terms, the doctrine stated that the adopted son could be the heir to his foster father's private property, but not the state; it was for the paramount power (the British) to decide whether to bestow the state on the adopted son or to annex it. Though this policy is attributed to Lord Dalhousie (1848–56), he was not its originator. It was a coincidence that during his governor-generalship several important cases arose in which the 'Doctrine' could be applied. Satara (1848), Jhansi, and Nagpur (1854). The other small states included Jaitpur (Bundelkhand), Sambhalpur (Orissa), and Baghat (Himachal Pradesh). annexed Awadh in 1856 on grounds of misgovt. Thus, Dalhousie annexed eight states during his eightyear tenure (1848–56) as governor general.

Relations of British India with Neighbouring Countries-
Anglo-Bhutanese Relations-The occupation of Assam in 1826 brought the British into close contacts with the mountain state of Bhutan. In 1865, the Bhutanese were forced to surrender the passes in return for an annual subsidy.

Anglo-Nepalese Relations-In 1801, the English annexed Gorakhpur, which brought the Gorkhas' boundary and the Company's boundary together. The conflict started due to the Gorkhas' capture of Butwal and Sheoraj in the period of Lord Hastings (1813–23). The war ended in the Treaty of Sagauli in 1816, which was in favour of the British. As per the treaty,

- Nepal accepted a British resident.
- Nepal ceded the districts of Garhwal and Kumaon, and abandoned claims to Terai.
- Nepal also withdrew from Sikkim.

This agreement brought many advantages to the British:

- the British empire now reached the Himalayas;
- it got better facilities for trade with Central Asia;
- it acquired sites for hill stations, such as Shimla, Mussoorie, and Nainital; and
- the Gorkhas joined the British Indian Army in large numbers.

Anglo-Burmese Relations-Annexation of Burma into British India in 1885.
First Burma War(1824-26)-Burmese exapnsion westwards, occupation of Arakan & Manipur, threat to Assam & Brahmputra valley. The British expeditionary forces occupied Rangoon in May 1824 and reached within 72 km of the capital at Ava. Peace was established in 1826 with the Treaty of Yandabo, which provided that the Govt of Burma:

- pay one crore rupees as war compensation;
- cede its coastal provinces of Arakan and Tenasserim;
- abandon claims on Assam, Cachar, and Jaintia;
- recognise Manipur as an independent state;
- negotiate a commercial treaty with Britain; and
- accept a British resident at Ava while posting a Burmese envoy at Calcutta.

Second Burma War(1852)- result of the British commercial need and the imperialist policy of Lord Dalhousie This time, the British occupied Pegu, the only remaining coastal province of Burma.
Third Burma War(1885)- The French also planned to lay a rail link from Mandalay to the French territory at a time when the British were in conflict with the French in Niger, Egypt, and Madagascar. A humiliating fine had been imposed on a British timber company by Thibaw. Dufferin ordered the invasion and final annexation of upper Burma in 1885.

Anglo-Tibetan Relations-Tibet was ruled by a theocracy of Buddhist monks (lamas) under nominal suzerainty of China. Russian influence increasing, Curzon felt alarmed, sent small Gorkha regiment, Tibetans refused to negotiate. Younghusband pushed his way into Lhasa (August 1904) while the Dalai Lama fled.
Treaty of Lhasa (1904)
Younghusband dictated terms to the Tibetan officials which provided that:

- Tibet would pay an indemnity of 75 lakh rupees at the rate of one lakh rupees per annum;
- as a security for payment, the Indian Govt would occupy the Chumbi Valley (territory between Bhutan and Sikkim) for 75 years;
- Tibet would respect the frontier of Sikkim;
- Trade marts would be opened at Yatung, Gyantse, Gartok; and
- Tibet would not grant any concession for railways, roads, telegraph, etc., to any foreign state, but give Great Britain some control over foreign affairs of Tibet.

Significance- Only China gained because the Anglo-Russian convention of 1907 provided that the two great powers would not negotiate with Tibet, except through the mediation of the Chinese govt.

Anglo-Afghan Relations-Tripartite Treaty(1838) b/w British, Sikhs & Shah Shuja, drastic change in pol. Situation. Persia lifted its siege of Herat, and Russia recalled its envoy from Kabul. Nevertheless, the British decided to go ahead with their forward policy. This resulted in the First Afghan War (1839-42). The British intention was to establish a permanent barrier against schemes of aggression from the north-west. British evacuated from Kabul and recognised Dost Mohammad as the independent ruler of Afghanistan.
John Lawrence & Policy of Masterly Inactivity-a reaction to the disasters of the First Afghan War. Lawrence's policy rested on the fulfilment of two conditions: (i) that the peace at the frontier was not disturbed, and (ii) that no candidate in civil war sought foreign help. And as Sher Ali established himself on the throne, Lawrence tried to cultivate friendship with him.
Lytton & Policy of Proud Reserve- He started a new foreign policy of 'proud reserve', which was aimed at having scientific frontiers and safeguarding 'spheres of influence'. According to Lytton, the relations with Afghanistan could no longer be left ambiguous.
Secong Anglo-Afghan War(1870-80)-Sher Ali refused to keep a British envoy in Kabul, Lytton displeased, decide to invade Afghanistan, Treaty of Gandamak signed with Yakub Khan, eldest son of Sher Ali.
Treaty of Gandamak(May1879)- The treaty signed after the Second-Anglo Afghan War provided that:

- the Amir conduct his foreign policy with the advice of the Govt of India;
- a permanent British resident be stationed at Kabul, and
- the Govt of India give Amir all support against foreign aggression, and an annual subsidy.

British India & North-West Frontier- Durand Agreement(1893)- Durand line b/w Afghan & British territories.

People's Resistance against British Before 1857

Factors Responsible for People's Resistance

- Colonial land revenue settlements; heavy burden of new taxes and eviction of peasants from their land
- Growth of intermediary revenue collectors, tenants, and moneylenders
- Expansion of revenue administration over tribal lands
- Destruction of indigenous industry and promotion of British manufactured goods
- End of patronage to priestly and scholarly classes
- Foreign character of the British rule

Civil Uprisings-

Causes-

- Rapid changes in the economy, administration, and land revenue system that went against the people.
- Several zamindars and poligars, who had lost control over their land and its revenues due to the colonial rule, had personal scores to settle with the new rulers.
- The ego of traditional zamindars and poligars was hurt due to being sidelined in rank by govt officials and a new class comprising of merchants and money-lenders.
- The ruin of Indian handicraft industries due to colonial policies impoverished millions of artisans whose misery was further compounded by the disappearance of their traditional patrons and buyers—princes, chieftains, and zamindars.
- The priestly classes instigated hatred and rebellion against alien rule, because the religious preachers, priests, pundits, maulvis, etc., had been dependent on the traditional landed and bureaucratic elite. The fall of zamindars and feudal lords directly affected the priestly class.
- The foreign character of the British rulers, who always remained alien to this land, and their contemptuous treatment of the native people hurt the pride of the latter.

Imp. Civil Uprisings-

Sanyasi Revolt(1763-1800)- The disastrous famine of 1770 and the harsh economic order of the British compelled a group of sanyasis in Eastern India to fight the British yoke. Originally peasants, even some evicted from land, these sanyasis were joined by a large number of dispossessed small zamindars, disbanded soldiers, and rural poor. Equal participation of Hindus and Muslims. Majnum Shah (or Majnu Shah), Chirag Ali, Musa Shah, Bhawani Pathak, and Debi Chaudhurani were imp. Leaders. Anandamath, a semi-historical novel by Bankim Chandra Chattopadhyay, is based on the Sanyasi Revolt. Bankim also wrote a novel, Devi Chaudhurani, as he saw the importance of women too taking up the struggle against an alien rule that posed a threat to traditional Indian values.

Revolt in Midnapore & Dhalbhum(1766-74)- The zamindars of Dhalbhum, Manbhum, Raipur, Panchet, Jhatibuni, Karnagarh, and Bagri, living in the vast tract of Jungle Mahals of west and north-west Midnapore—were ultimately dispossessed of their zamindaries by 1800s. The important leaders of the uprisings were Damodar Singh and Jagannath Dhal.

Revolt of Moamarias(1769-99)- The revolt of the Moamarias in 1769 was a potent challenge to the authority of Ahom kings of Assam. The Moamarias were low-caste peasants who followed the teachings of Aniruddhadeva (1553–1624). To crush these revolts, the Ahom ruler had to request for British help. The Moamarias made Bhatiapar their headquarters. Rangpur and Jorhat were the most affected region. Although, the Ahom kingdom survived the rebellion, the weakened kingdom fell to a Burmese invasion and finally came under British rule.

Civil Uprisings in Gkp, Basti & Bahraich(1781)-Hannay was appointed as izaradar(revenue farmer) in the area. Hannay's oppression and excessive demand of revenue made the region, which had been in a flourishing state under the Nawab, panic-striken. The zamindars and cultivators rose against the unbearable exactions in 1781, and, within weeks of the initial uprising, all of Hannay's subordinates were either killed or besieged by zamindari guerilla forces. Although the rebellion was suppressed, Hannay was dismissed and his izara forcibly removed.

Revolt of Raja of Vizianagram(1794)-Treaty b/w ruler of Vizi & English to jointly oust French from Northern circars, they were successful, EIC demanded a tribute of 3 Lakh rupees, this angered the Raja, Raja supported by his subjects rose up in revolt, raja died in a battle at Padmanabham in 1794.
Revolt of Dhundia in Bednur(1799-1800)- Dhundia Wagh, a local Maratha leader, organised a force, which consisted of anti-British elements, and carved out asmall territory for himself. A defeat by the English in August 1799 forced him to take refuge in Maratha region from where he instigated the disappointed princes to fight against the English and he himself took on the leadership. In September 1800, he was killed while fighting.
Resistance of Kerala Varma Pazhassi Raja(1797;1800-1805)- The new raja, to meet the revenue target fixed by the Company, levied exorbitant rates of tax on the peasants. This led to a mass resistance by the peasants under the leadership of Pazhassi Raja in 1793. Pazhassi Raja fought bravely using guerilla warfare, and, in 1797, a peace treaty was made. But a conflict over a dispute on Wayanad in 1800 started an insurgent warfare. Pazhassi Raja organised a large force of Nairs which was supplemented by Mappilas and Pathans. In November 1805, the Kerala Simham died in a gunfight at Mavila Todu near present-day KeralaKarnataka border.
Civil Rebellion in Awadh(1799)-Wazir Ali Khan became4th Nawab of Awadh in Sept 1797, with the help of British but relations became sour & got replaced by uncle, Saadat Ali Khan II. In 1799, killed a British resident & 2 other Europeans(Massacre of Benaras), assembled an army of several thousand men but got defeated, fled to Butwal, extradited & placed in confinement at Fort William, Calcutta.
Uprisings in Ganjam & Gumsur(1800,1835-37)- Strikara Bhanj, a zamindar of Gumsur in Ganjam district, refused to pay revenues in 1797. In 1800, he openly rebelled and defied the public authorities, was joined by Jlani Deo of Vizianagar (Poddakimedi) and Jagannath Deo of Pratapgiri (Chinakimedi). Dhananjaya, son of Strikara, rebelled against the English but was forced to surrender in June 1815. unable to pay the enormous arrears, Dhananjay Bhanj rose in rebellion for the second time when the British forces occupied Gumsur and Kolaida in November 1835. The struggle lasted till February 1837, when Doora Bisayi, a formidable leader, was arrested. The zamindari of Gumsur was forfeited.
Uprisings in Palamau(1800-02)- In 1800, Bhukhan Singh, a Chero chief, rose in rebellion. Bhukhan Singh died in 1802, and, subsequently, the insurrection calmed down.
Poligars' Revolt(1795-1805)-Stiff resistance to British, Centres-Tinneveli (or Thirunelveli), Ramanathapuram, Sivaganga, Sivagiri, Madurai, and North Arcot. First revolt over taxation.
Kattabomman Nayakan, the poligar of Panjalankurichi, led the insurrection between 1795 and 1799, was captured & hanged alongwith associates. Second phase, more violent, Feb 1801, started when poligars imprisoned in the fort of Palamcotta were able to escape. Between 1803 and 1805, the poligars of North Arcot rose in rebellion, when they were deprived of their right to collect the kaval fees. (Kaval or 'watch' was an ancient institution of Tamil Nadu. It was a hereditary village police office with specified rights and responsibilities.)
Uprisings in Haryana Region(1803-10)- treaty of Surji-Arjungaon in 1803-Haryana to British, people opposed, british victorious in battles, bloody baatle at Bhiwani.
Diwan Velu Thampi's Revolt(1808-09)-Deep resentment due to harsh conditions imposed in state of Tavancore. assisted by the Nair troops. Velu Thampi addressed a gathering in Kundara, openly calling for taking up arms against the British to oust them from the native soil. This was later known as the Kundara Proclamation.
Disturbances in Bundekhand(1808-12)-conquers in Second Anglo-Marathas. The first major resistance came from Lakshaman Dawa, the killadar (fort commander) of Ajaygarh Fort. To put a stop to these disturbances, the British had to adopt a policy of binding down the hereditary chieftains of Bundelkhand by a series of contractual obligations—Ikarnamahs.

Parlakimedi Outbreak-(1813-34) When the Company acquired Ganjam, Narayan Deo was the raja of Parlakimedi, whose resistance forced the British to dispatch an army under Colonel Peach. Peach defeated Narayan Deo in 1768 and made Gajapathi Deo (son of Narayan) a zamindar. But Narayan Deo, supported by his son and brothers, revolted again. As the resistance failed to calm down, the Presidency of Madras appointed George Russell as commissioner of the region in 1832. Russell, provided with full-fledged powers to suppress the revolt, pacified the region by 1834.
Kutch Rebellion(1816-32)-British deposed Kutch ruler Rao Bharamal, excessive land assessment led to deep resentment & revolt. After extensive military operations failed to control the situation, the Company's authorities were compelled to follow a conciliatory policy.
Rising at Bareily(1816)-Cause-Imposition of Police Tax, Mufti's petition to magistrate, inury to a women led to scuffle b/w followers of Mufti & police. Several armed Muslims from Pilibhit, Rampur & Shahjahanpur rose in rebellion for the defence of the faith and the Mufti. Suppressed by heavy deployment of military forces.
Upsurge in Hathras(1817)- Dayaram, a talukdar of several villages in the district of Aligarh. English had concluded the settlement of Hathras estate with Dayaram as a farmer. Dayaram constantly failed to pay arrears. So, the Company with a large army attacked Hathras in February 1817. Dayaram fought bravely for more than 15 days and escaped unharmed.
Paika Rebellion(1817)- The Paiks of Odisha were the traditional landed militia ('foot soldiers' literally) and enjoyed rent-free land tenures for their military service and policing functions on a hereditary basis.EIC's conquest reduced the power and prestige of the Paiks. With active support of Mukunda Deva, the last Raja of Khurda, and other zamindars of the region, Bakshi Jagabandhu Bidyadhar led a sundry army of Paikas forcing the East India Company forces to retreat for a time. The rebellion came to be known as the Paika Bidroh (rebellion). The rebellion was brutally repressed by 1818. The Paika Rebellion succeeded in getting large remissions of arrears, reductions in assessments, suspension of the sale of the estates of defaulters at discretion, a new settlement on fixed tenures, and other adjuncts of a liberal governance.
Waghera Rising(1818-20)-Resentment against alien rule compelled Waghera chiefs to take up arms. Peace treaty signed in Nov 1820.
Ahom Revolt(1828)- British had pledged to withdraw but attempted to incorporate Ahoms' territories in Company's dominion. leadership of Gomdhar Konwar, an Ahom prince, alongwith compatriots, such as Dhanjay Borgohain, and Jairam Khargharia Phukan. Finally, the Company decided to follow a conciliatory policy and handed over Upper Assam to Maharaja Purandar Singh Narendra and part of the kingdom was restored to the Assamese king.
Surat Salt Agitations(1840s)- Attacks by local Surat popn due to raise the salt duty from 50 paise to one rupee.
Kolhapur & Savantvadi Revolts- Gadkaris were a hereditary military class which was garrisoned in the Maratha forts. Facing the spectre of unemployment, the Gadkaris rose in revolt and occupied the Samangarh and Bhudargarh forts.The British authorities introduced many laws to bring the region under control.
Wahabi Movement- Islamic revivalist movement founded by Syed Ahmed of Rai Bareilly who was inspired by the teachings of Abdul Wahab (1703–87) of Saudi Arabia and Shah Waliullah of Delhi. Syed Ahmed condemned the Western influence on Islam and advocated a return to pure Islam and society as it was in the Arabia of the Prophet's time. The Wahabis played an important role in spreading antiBritish sentiments. A series of military operations by the British in the 1860s on the Wahabi base in Sithana and various court cases of sedition on the Wahabis weakened the Wahabi resistance, although sporadic encounters with the authorities continued into the 1880s and 1890s.
Kuka Movement- founded in 1840 by Bhagat Jawahar Mal (aka Sian Saheb) in western Punjab. Its basic tenets were abolition of caste and similar discriminations among Sikhs, discouraging the consumption of meat and alcohol and drugs, permission for intermarriages, widow remarriage, and encouraging women to step out of seclusion. On the political side, the Kukas wanted to remove the British and restore Sikh rule over Punjab; they advocated wearing hand-woven clothes and boycott of English laws and education and products. So, the concepts of Swadeshi and non-cooperation were propagated by the Kukas, much before they became part of the Indian national movement in the early 20th century. As the movement gained in popularity, the British took several steps to crush it in the period between 1863 and 1872.

Peasant Movements with Religious Overtones-

Narkelberia Uprising- Mir Nithar Ali (1782–1831) or Titu Mir inspired the Muslim tenants in WB to rise against landlords, mainly Hindu, who imposed a beard-tax on the Faraizis and British indigo planters. First armed peasant uprising, soon took religious hue. Late merged into Wahabi movt.

The Pagal Panthis- a semi-religious group mainly constituting the Hajong and Garo tribes of Mymensingh district (earlier in Bengal), was founded by Karam Shah. to fight the oppression of the zamindars. From 1825 to 1835, the Pagal Panthis refused to pay rent above a certain limit and attacked the houses of zamindars. Movt violently suppressed.

Faraizi Revolt- followers of a Muslim sect founded by Haji Shariatullah of Faridpur in Eastern Bengal, advocated radical religious, social, and political changes. Dudu Miyan & Shriatullah (1819-62) organised their followers with an aim to expel the English intruders from Bengal, supported the cause of the tenants against the zamindars, from 1838 to 1857. Joined Wahabi ranks.

Moplah Uprisings- Hike in revenue demand and reduction of field size, coupled with the oppression of officials, resulted in widespread peasant unrest among the Moplahs of Malabar. Twenty-two rebellions took place between 1836 and 1854. None, however, proved successful.

Tribal Revolts-

Different Causes for Mainland & N-E Tribal Revolts-

Mainland-Tribal land or forests, land settlements of British disrupted social fabric, lost their land & influx of non-tribals,Shifting cultivation curbed, setting up of reserved forests& restriction on timber use & grazing,exploitation by police, traders & moneylenders aggravated their sufferings, Christian missionaries resented by Tribals

N-E Frontier- the tribes which shared tribal and cultural links with countries across the border did not concern themselves much with the nationalist struggle, not forest based or agrarian revolts, much later British entry, frontier tribal revolts under the British continued for a longer time, De-sanskritisation movements also spread.

Characteristics of Tribal Revolts-

- Resentment against the imposition of laws by the 'foreign govt' that was seen as an effort at destroying the tribals' traditional socioeconomic framework.
- Erosion of the tribal rights over land and forest because of the rules imposed by the British, large-scale alienation of land from the tribes as the non-tribe people slowly took over the land
- Many uprisings were led by messiah-like figures who encouraged their people to revolt and who held out the promise that they could end their suffering brought about by the 'outsiders'.
- The tribal uprisings were doomed from the beginning, given the outdated arms they fought with as against the modern weapons and techniques used by their opponents.
- Tribal identity or ethnic ties lay behind the solidarity shown by these groups. Not all 'outsiders' were, however, seen as enemies: the poor who lived by their manual labour or profession and had a socially/economically supportive role in the village were left alone; the violence was directed towards the moneylenders and traders who were seen as extensions of the colonial govt.

Important Tribal Movements of the Mainland-

The Pahariyas- The hill folk who lived around the Rajmahal hills were known as the Pahariyas. They subsisted on forest produce and practised shifting cultivation. Hostile to outsiders.In years of scarcity, they raided plains occupied by settled agriculturalists. Setttled agri expanded, area under forests & pastures reduced, conflict b/w hill folk & settled cultivators increased.In 1770s, British brutal attack, aimed at hunting & killing them, The Pahariyas rebellion of 1778 led by Raja Jagganath is notable. In the 1780s, the British initiated a policy of pacification; Paharia chiefs were given an annual allowance in return for ensuring that their men conducted themselves properly. Not all Pahariyas were ready to accept this policy.

Revolt led by Tilka Manjhi-Guerilla warfare against British in Santhal Pargana Tilka is said to have shot the British magistrate of Rajmahal, Augustus Cleveland. The British made a concerted attack on Manjhi and his followers, finally capturing Manjhi and hanging him in 1785. Manjhi is considered to be the first Adivasi leader to take up arms against the British.Reason for revolt-policy of exploitation, extortion, and harassment by revenue collectors, police officers, and the agents of the landlords.

Jungle Mahal Revolt or Chuar Uprising-Jungle Mahal is indefinite administrative unit lying b/w Chota Nagpur& plains of Bengal(some parganas in Birbhum, Bankura, and Midnapore).According to J.C. Jha, the Chuars were the Bhumij tribals belonging originally to the Mundari main stock, who settled in these areas, basically farmers & hunters. Some worked as Paiks(guards who policed the village). The first Chuar rebellion broke out as a reaction to the increase of the revenue of the jungle zamindars. In 1768, Jagannath Singh, the zamindar of Ghatsila, went up in arms, along with thousands of Chuar followers. The Company govt capitulated. In 1771, the Chuar sardars, Shyam Ganjan of Dhadka, Subla Singh of Kaliapal, and Dubraj rose in rebellion. This time, however, the rebellion was suppressed. The most significant uprising was under Durjan (or Durjol) Singh in 1798. British policies made the hiring of local paiks reduntant. In May 1798, his followers, a body of 1,500 Chuars, indulged in violent activities in Raipur to halt the auction of the estate of Raipur. The revolt was brutally suppressed by the British in 1799. Other leaders of the Chuars were Madhab Singh, the brother of the raja of Barabhum; Raja Mohan Singh, zamindar of Juriah; and Lachman Singh of Dulma.

Tamar Revolt- revolt in 1798 under Bholanath Sahay as a reaction to the faulty and alien systems imposed by the British, joined by Munda tribals, suppressed by Lt. Cooper.

Kol Mutiny(1831)- Kols covered Ranchi, Singhbhum, Hazaribagh, Palamau, and the western parts of Manbhum. large-scale transfers of land from Kol headmen to outsiders like Hindu, Sikh, and Muslim farmers and moneylenders who were oppressive and demanded heavy taxes. The Kols resented this, and, in 1831, under the leadership of Buddho Bhagat, the Kol rebels killed or burnt about a thousand outsiders. Only after large-scale military operations could order be restored.

Ho & Munda Uprisings(1820-37)- The Raja of Parahat organised his Ho tribals to revolt against the occupation of Singhbhum (now in Jharkhand). The revolt continued till 1827. later in 1831, they again organised a rebellion, joined by the Mundas of Chotanagpur, to protest against the newly introduced farming revenue policy and the entry of Bengalis into their region.

Santhal Rebellions(1833;1855-56)-Santhals were ready to give up nomadic life & lead a settled life.British persuaded them to settle in foothills of Rajmahal but the feud b/w Santhals & Pahsriyas continued for a long time. British worked out a compromise by forming Damin-i-Koh(Persian term meaning the skirts – or outside edges – of the hills) in 1832-33. The Permanent Settlement Act of 1793 proved to be disastrous, heavy taxes levied, high rates of interest, took possession of the land. By the 1850s, the Santhals felt the need to rebel against the zamindars and the moneylenders. The rebellion soon turned into a movement against the British colonial state. The Santhals called the rebellion 'hul', meaning a movement for liberation. Under Sidhu and Kanhu Murmu, two brothers, the Santhals proclaimed an end to Company rule, and declared the area between Bhagalpur and Rajmahal as autonomous. Phulo and Jhano Murmu, the sisters of Sidhu and Kanhu, participated in the rebellion. The British suppressed the rebellion with a heavy hand by 1856, burning down villages or destroying them with the help of elephants, and killing thousands of Santhals. Sidhu and Kanhu were killed.

Khond Uprisings(1837-56)- Khonds of the hilly tracts extending from Odisha to the Srikakulam and Visakhapatnam districts of Andhra Pradesh revolted against Company rule. Chakra Bisoi, a young raja, led the Khonds, who were joined by the Ghumsar, Kalahandi, and other tribals to oppose the suppression of human sacrifice, new taxes, and the entry of zamindars into their areas. With Chakra Bisoi's disappearance, the uprising came to an end.
Koya Revolts-Koyas of eastern Godavari track joined by Khonda Sara chiefs & Tomma Sora(1879-80). oppression by police and moneylenders, new regulations, and denial of their customary rights over forest areas.
Bhil Revolts-lived in western ghats b/w north & deccan. revolted against Company rule in 1817–19, as they had to face famine, economic distress, and misgovt. revolted again in 1825, 1831, and in 1846. Under Govind Guru in 1913.
Koli Risings-in 1829, 1839, and again during 1844–48. resented the imposition of Company's rule which brought with it large-scale unemployment for them and the dismantling of their forts.
Ramosi Risings-Western Ghats, employed by Maratha admin, lost their means of livelihood. Under Chittur Singh in 1822 & plundered around Satara. Again, there were eruptions in 1825–26 under Umaji Naik of Poona and his supporter Bapu Trimbakji Sawant, and the disturbances continued till 1829. The disturbance occurred again in 1839 over deposition and banishment of Raja Pratap Singh of Satara, and disturbances erupted in 1840–41 also. British followed Pacifist policy towards them.

Sepoy Mutinies(Before 1857)-
Causes-(i) discrimination in payment and promotions;
(ii) mistreatment of the sepoys by the British officials;
(iii) refusal of the govt to pay foreign service
allowance while fighting in remote regions;
(iv) religious objections of the high-caste Hindu sepoys to Lord Canning's General Service Enlistment Act (1856) ordering all recruits to be ready for service both within and outside India.
Further, the sepoys shared all the discontent and grievances—social, religious, and economic—that afflicted the civilian population.
Imp. Mutinies-(i) The mutiny of the sepoys in Bengal in 1764
(ii) The Vellore mutiny of 1806 when the sepoys protested against interference in their social and religious practices and raised a banner of revolt unfurling the flag of the ruler of Mysore
(iii) The mutiny of the sepoys of the 47th Native Infantry Unit in 1824
(iv) The revolt of the Grenadier Company in Assam in 1825
(v) The mutiny of an Indian regiment at Sholapur in 1838
(vi) The mutinies of the 34th Native Infantry (N.I.), the 22nd N.I., the 66th N.I., and the 37th N.I. in 1844, 1849, 1850, and 1852 respectively.

Weaknesses of People's Uprisings-

- These uprisings drew a large number of participants but were, in fact, localised and occurred at different times in different regions.
- They mostly arose out of local grievances.
- The leadership was semi-feudal in character, backwardlooking, traditional in outlook, and their resistance did not offer alternatives to the existing social set-up.
- If many of these revolts seemed similar to one another in wanting to oust the alien rule, it was not because of some 'national' impulse or common effort, but because they were protesting against conditions that were common to them.
- These rebellions were centuries-old in form and ideological / cultural content.
- Those who were not so uncooperative or obstinate were pacified through concessions by the authorities.

● The methods and arms used by the fighters in these uprisings were practically obsolete compared to the weapons and strategy—as well as deception and chicanery—employed by their opponents.

18. Gond Uprising (1940s) to bring together the believers of Gond-dharma.

Some Tribal Movements after 1857

Though this chapter is basically about the uprisings before the 1857 Revolt, it cannot be forgotten that some tribal revolts continued to take place after 1857. Some of these are discussed below.

Bokta Rising, Sardari Larai, or Mukti Larai Movement Chotanagpur was the scene of this movement between 1858 and 1895. It was aimed at regaining the tribals' age old right over land by pushing out the landlords. In the earlier phases of the revolt, the tribal tenants rose against the landlords because of the increased rent, eviction from land, and harassment by the landlords. Later, in the 1890s, the Sardar movement turned against all Europeans as they were suspected to be colluding with the landlords. British rule was perceived to be at the root of the problems faced by the tribals, therefore it had to end. When constitutional methods got little result, the tribals took to violence, using their traditional weapons such as bows and arrows. But the struggle lacked organisation and a good leader.

Birsa Munda Revolt In the 1890s, Birsa Munda emerged at the head of a movement of the Munda tribes of SInghbhum and Ranchi districts of Chotanagpur region. The Ulgulan ('Great Tumult'), as this movement was called, and which was aimed at getting independence establishing a Munda Raj, went on in phases right into the twentieth century. With the coming of the British, the traditional ways of the tribals both with regard to their social customs and with regard to land were drastically affected as the British policies introduced the zamindari system with the new classes of landlords and tenants. The tribals were now forced to pay rent to the landlords and failure to do so resulted in their eviction from land. Paying rent meant increasing dependence on usurious moneylenders and ultimately debt. Resenting the harassment by the landlords, who were encroaching the tribal land and often pushed them into begar (forced labour), besides using brute force, the Munda tribals rose in revolt under Birsa Munda. The objective was to attain religious and political independence. The arrest and conviction of Birsa to two years of imprisonment by the British made the rebels more determined to go ahead with the movement which now took to violence. The revolt broke out in December 1899 and was directed against the dikus who included Christian missionaries as well as the much-hated landlords, contractors, police, and government officials. The British response was ruthless suppression. Birsa was arrested in 1900 and died of illness. Many rebels who were arrested were imprisoned and sentenced to death. The movement was, thus, weakened.

Following the Birsa Movement, the authorities felt that the interests of the tribals needed to be safeguarded. The government decided to abolish the compulsory begar system and passed the Tenancy Act of 1903 under which the Mundas' Khuntkatti system was recognised. The Chotanagpur Tenancy Act was passed in 1908. Birsa assumed legendary fame, and his movement was an inspiration for the social, religious, and political movements of tribals in the future.

Tana Bhagat Movement A young man, Jatra Oraon of Ranchi, proclaimed in April 1914 that he had been divinely ordained to become a king and his followers in his kingdom would be the Tana Bhagats. Tana Bhagats were called upon to discard earthly possessions such as agricultural implements and reject practices such as spirit worship and sacrifice. They sought to reorder the Oraon society. The Tana Bhagat Movement in the official history of the state of Jharkhand is represented as having been initiated by Jatra Oraon in 1914, and later led by Sibu Oraon in 1919. It was part of the agrarian discontent in Jharkhand against the imposition of begar and the illegal increase in rent by the zamindars and intermediary tenure-holders with whom the colonial state collaborated. They opposed moneylenders as well as missionaries. The Tana Bhagats conducted a satyagraha even before Gandhi's satyagraha movement. They differed from the movements led by Sido and Kanhu Murmu or Birsa Munda in that they were primarily religious and nonviolent. In 1921, during the Non-Cooperation Movement, the Tana Bhagats were drawn into the organisational fold of the Congress.

Devi Movement The Devi movement was initially a social movement among the tribals of South Gujarat in 1922-23. It was initiated by the assumption that Devi Salabai was commanding the tribals to abstain from eating flesh and drinking liquor and to wash and be clean. By December 1922, the movement spread over the region inhabited by the tribals as well as Surat city. This movement soon targeted those classes which exploited the tribals, such as landlords and moneylenders, and those who were in the liquor trade. Towards the end of 1922, this movement became a part of the Non-Cooperation Movement.

North-East Frontier Tribal Movements: Year, Region, Major Causes

Movements Before 1857

1. Ahoms' Revolt (1828–33; Assam); against the non-fulfilment of the pledges of the Company after the Burmese War; the uprising was suppressed by the Company by dividing the kingdom.
2. Khasis' Revolt (1830s; hilly region between Jaintia and Garo Hills); led by the Nunklow ruler, Tirath Singh; against the occupation of the hilly region.
3. Singphos' Rebellion (1830s; Assam); led to murder of British political agent of Assam by Singphos in 1839; was ultimately suppressed.

Movements After 1857

1. Kukis' Revolt (1917–19; Manipur); against British policies of recruiting labour during the first World War.
2. Revolts in Tripura; against hike in house tax rates and against settlement of outsiders in the region
   (a) led by Parikshit Jamatia (1863)
   (b) the Reangs' revolt led by Ratnamani (1942–43)
   (c) led by Bharti Singh (1920s)
3. Zeliangsong Movement (1920s; Manipur); led by the Zemi, Liangmei and Rongmei tribes; against the failure of British to protect them during the Kuki violence in 1917–19.
4. Naga movement (1905-31; Manipur); led by Jadonang; against British rule and for setting up of a Naga raj.
5. Heraka Cult (1930s; Manipur); led by Gaidinliu; the movement was suppressed but Kabui Naga Association was formed in 1946.
6. Other Smaller Movements were the revolt of the Syntengs of Jaintia Hills in 1860–62; the Phulaguri peasants' rebellion in 1861, the revolt of the Saflas in 1872–73; the uprising of the Kacha Nagas of Cachhar in 1882; and a women's war in Manipur in 1904.

Summary

Revolt—a product of character and policies of colonial rule

Economic causes—heavy taxation under new revenue settlement, summary evictions, discriminatory tariff policy against Indian products, destruction of traditional handicrafts industry, and absence of concomitant industrialisation on modern lines that hit peasants, artisans, and small zamindars.

Political causes—greedy policy of aggrandisement, absentee sovereigntyship character of British rule, British interference in socio-religious affairs of the Indian public.

Military causes—discontent among sepoys for economic, psychological, and religious reasons, coupled with a long history of revolts.

- Centres of Revolt and Leaders

Delhi	- General Bakht Khan
Kanpur	- Nana Saheb
Lucknow	- Begum Hazrat Mahal
Bareilly	- Khan Bahadur
Bihar	- Kunwar Singh
Faizabad	- Maulvi Ahmadullah
Jhansi	- Rani Laxmibai
Baghpat	- Shah Mal

Conclusion: Not quite the first war of independence but sowed the seeds of nationalism and quest for freedom from alien rule.

- Effect

Crown took over; Company rule abolished. Queen's Proclamation altered administration. Army reorganised. Racial hatred deepened.
White Mutiny.

Socio-Religious Reform Movements: General Features-
Factors giving rise to desire for reform-

1. Impact of British Rule-Most of the earlier invaders, who had come to India settled within its frontiers, were either absorbed by its superior culture. However, the British conquest was different. affected in every aspect by science and scientific outlook & presented India as a stagnant civilisation and a static and decadent society.
2. Social Conditions Ripe for Reform-
    - Religious & Social Ills- India caught in religious superstitions and social obscurantism.
    - Depressing Position of Women-Female infanticide, child marriage, Ploygamy, Kulinism(old men marrying young women), Sati Pratha
    - Caste Problem-untouchables suffered from numerous and severe disabilities and restrictions. Under a rigid caste system, social mobility was checked, social divisions grew, and individual initiative was thwarted.
3. Opposition to Western Culture
4. New Awareness among enlightened Indians

Social & Ideological Bases of Reform-
Middle Class Base-the intelligentsia of the 19th century India did not grow from trade or industry (which were firmly under the control of British agencies); their roots lay in govt service or the professions of law, education, journalism, or medicine.
The Intellectual Criteria-What gave these reform movements an ideological unity were rationalism, religious universalism, and humanism.
Two Streams-the reformist movements like the Brahmo Samaj, the Prarthana Samaj, the Aligarh Movement, and the revivalist movements like the Arya Samaj movement and the Deobandi movt.

Direction of Social Reform-The social reform movements were linked to the religious reforms primarily because nearly all social ills like untouchability and gender-based inequity derived legitimacy from religion in one way or the other. In later years, though, the social reform movement gradually dissociated itself from religion and adopted a secular approach. To reach masses, Indian languages used. Soc. Ref. Movts broadly had 2 point agenda: fight for the betterment of status of women in society and fight to remove disabilities arising out of untouchability.
Fight for betterment of Position of Women: raised their voice against degrading customs such as polygamy, purdah, child marriage, restrictions on widow marriage, and worked relentlessly to establish educational facilities for women, to persuade the govt to enact favourable legislations for women and in general to propagate the uselessness of medieval, feudal attitudes which required to be given up.
Steps taken:
Abolition of Sati-Led by Raja Rammohan Roy, the govt under Governor-General William Bentinck declared the practice of sati illegal and punishable by criminal courts as culpable homicide.
Preventing Female Infanticide-The Bengal regulations of 1795 and 1804 declared infanticide illegal and equivalent to murder. An act passed in 1870 made it compulsory for parents to register the birth of all babies, and it provided for verification of female children for some years after birth.
Widow Remarriage-due to the efforts of Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar (1820–91), the principal of Sanskrit College, Calcutta, that the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856, was passed; it legalised marriage of widows and declared issues from such marriages as legitimate. Vishnu Shastri Pandit founded the Widow Remarriage Association in the 1850s. Another prominent worker in this field was Karsandas Mulji who started the Satya Prakash in Gujarati in 1852 to advocate widow remarriage. Similar efforts were made by Professor D.K. Karve in western India and by Veerasalingam Pantulu in Madras. Karve himself married a widow in 1893. He dedicated his life to the upliftment of Hindu widows.

Controlling Child Marriage-The Native Marriage Act (or Civil Marriage Act), 1872 signified legislative action in prohibiting child marriage. It had a limited impact as the act was not applicable to Hindus, Muslims, and other recognised faiths. Dadaji Bhikaji vs Rukhmabai case of 1884. The Child Marriage Restraint Act 1929, popularly known as the Sarda Act, which came into force in 1930, further pushed up the marriage age to 18 and 14 for boys and girls, respectively. Child Marriage Restraint (Amendment) Act, 1978 raised the age of marriage for girls from 15 to 18 years and for boys from 18 to 21.

Education of Women-Calcutta Female Juvenile Society in 1819. The Bethune School, founded by J.E.D. Bethune(1840s & 1850s), Elphinstone Educational Institution, Bombay- Jagannath 'Nana' Shankarsheth founder. Jyotirao Phule (also called Jyotiba Phule) and his wife Savitribai(sirst female teacher of modern India)- opened the first school for girls at Bhidewada, Pune in 1848. The Alexandra Society of Parsis opened in 1863 was aimed at educating Parsi girls. Incidentally, the first woman graduate of Bombay University was a Parsi woman, Cornelia Sorabji, in 1887. The Indian Women's University set up by Professor D.K. Karve in 1916 was one of the outstanding institutions imparting education to women. In the same year, Lady Hardinge Medical College was opened in Delhi.

Women's Organisations-In 1910, Sarla Devi Chaudhurani convened the first meeting of the Bharat Stree Mahamandal in Allahabad. Ramabai Ranade founded the Ladies Social Conference (Bharat Mahila Parishad), under the parent organisation National Social Conference, in 1904 in Bombay. Pandita Ramabai Saraswati founded the Arya Mahila Samaj to serve the cause of women. In 1925, the National Council of Women in India, a national branch of the International Council of Women, was formed. Mehribai Tata played a vital role in its formation and advancement. Other women who held important positions on the executive committee of the council included Cornelia Sarabji, India's first lady barrister; Tarabai Premchand, wife of a wealthy banker; Shaffi Tyabji, a member of one of Mumbai's leading Muslim families; and Maharani Sucharu Devi, daughter of Keshab Chandra Sen. The All India Women's Conference (AIWC), founded by Margaret Cousins in 1927, was perhaps the first women's organisation with an egalitarian approach. Its first conference was held at Ferguson College, Pune. Important founding members included Maharani Chimnabai Gaekwad, Rani Sahiba of Sangli, Sarojini Naidu, Kamla Devi Chattopadhyaya, and Lady Dorab Tata. Its objectives were to work for a society based on principles of social justice, integrity, equal rights and opportunities; and to secure for every human being, the essentials of life, not determined by accident of birth or sex but by planned social distribution. the AIWC worked towards various legislative reforms before and after India's independence, some examples being Sarda Act (1929), Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (1937), Factory Act (1947), Hindu Marriage and Divorce Act (1954), Special Marriage Act (1954), Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act (1956), Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act (1956), the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women Act (1958), Maternity Benefits Act (1961), Dowry Prohibition Act (1961), and Equal Remuneration Act (1958, 1976).

Struggle against Caste-Based Exploitation-

Factors that Helped to Mitigate Caste-based Discrimination-

- British rule, perhaps without intention, created certain conditions that undermined caste consciousness to an extent like creation of pvt property in land & free sale of land upset caste equations, concept of equality before law.
- Social Reform Movts like Brahmo Samaj, Prarthana Samaj, Arya Samaj, Ramakrishna Mission, the Theosophists, the Social Conference etc also strove to undermine caste-based exploitation
- The national movement took inspiration from the principles of liberty and equality against the forces which tended to divide the society.
- With increasing opportunities of education and general awakening, there were stirrings among the lower castes themselves like Gopal Baba Walangkar(worked against caste discrimination in Raigad district, first Dalit to launch a newspaper, the Vital Vidhvasak(Destroyer of Brahmanical or Ceremonial Pollution), Babasaheb Ambedkar & Kisan Faguji bansod.

- The Constitution of free India has made equality and non-discrimination on the basis of caste imperative.

Socio-Cultural Reform Movements & their leaders-

Raja Rammohan Roy & Brahmo Samaj-RRR often called father of Indian Renaissance and the maker of Modern India, In 1814, he set up the Atmiya Sabha (or Society of Friends) in Calcutta to propagate the monotheistic ideals of the Vedanta and to campaign against idolatry, caste rigidities,meaningless rituals, and other social ills, founded the Brahmo Sabha in August 1828; it was later renamed Brahmo Samaj. The Samaj was committed to "the worship and adoration of the Eternal, Unsearchable, Immutable Being who is the Author and Preserver of the Universe". The long-term agenda of the Brahmo Samaj—to purify Hinduism and to preach monotheism—was based on the twin pillars of reason and the Vedas and Upanishads. The Samaj also tried to incorporate teachings of other religions and kept its emphasis on human dignity, opposition to idolatry, and criticism of social evils such as sati. strong opposition from orthodox elements like Raja Radhakant Deb who organised the Dharma Sabha to counter BS.

The features of Brahmo Samaj may be summed up in this way.

- It denounced polytheism and idol worship;
- It discarded faith in divine avataras (incarnations);
- It denied that any scripture could enjoy the status of ultimate authority transcending human reason and conscience.
- It took no definite stand on the doctrine of karma and transmigration of soul and left it to individual Brahmos to believe either way.
- It criticised the caste system.

Raja Rammohan Roy's efforts at Social Reform-

Determined crusader against inhuman practice of Sati fro 1818. He cited sacred texts to prove his contention besides appealing to humanity, reason & compassion. He also visited the cremation grounds, organised vigilance groups, and filed counter petitions to the govt during his struggle against sati. Govt Regulation in 1829 declared Sati illegal.

Roy attacked polygamy and the degraded state of widows and demanded the right of inheritance and property for women. He did much to disseminate the benefits of modern education to his countrymen. He was a gifted linguist. As a political activist, Roy condemned oppressive practices of Bengali zamindars and demanded fixation of maximum rents. He also demanded abolition of taxes on taxfree lands. He called for a reduction of export duties on Indian goods abroad and abolition of the East India Company's trading rights. He demanded the Indianisation of superior services and separation of the executive from the judiciary. He demanded judicial equality between Indians and Europeans and that trial be held by jury. He was an internationalist & stood for cooperation of thought and activity and brotherhood among nations. Roy had David Hare, Alexander Duff, Debendranath Tagore, P.K. Tagore, Chandrashekhar Deb, and Tarachand Chakraborty as his associates.

Debendranath Tagore & Brahmo Samaj-Joined Brahmo Samaj in 1842. Earlier, Tagore headed the Tattvabodhini Sabha (founded in 1839) which, along with its organ Tattvabodhini Patrika in Bengali*,* was devoted to the systematic study of India's past with a rational outlook and to the propagation of Rammohan's ideas. Tagore worked on two fronts: within Hinduism, the Brahmo Samaj was a reformist movement; outside, it resolutely opposed the Christian missionaries for their criticism of Hinduism and their attempts at conversion. The revitalised Samaj supported widow remarriage, women's education, abolition of polygamy, improvement in ryots' conditions, and temperance.

Keshab Chandra Sen & Brahmo Samaj-Joined in 1858, was instrumental in popularising the movt, and branches of the Samaj were opened outside Bengal—in the United Provinces, Punjab, Bombay,

Madras, and other towns. Too radical. Dismissed from ofc of Acharya in 1865. Keshab and his followers founded the Brahmo Samaj of India in 1866, while Debendranath Tagore's Samaj came to be known as the Adi Brahmo Samaj. In 1878, got his 13 year old daughter married with all orthodox Hindu rituals which caused another split in Keshab's Brahma Samaj of India. Disgusted followers like Ananda Mohan Bose, Sib Chandra Deb, and Umeshchandra Dutta of Keshab set up Sadharan Brahmo Samaj.
Significance of Brahma Samaj-In matters of social reform, the Samaj attacked many dogmas and superstitions. It condemned the prevailing Hindu prejudice against going abroad. It worked for a respectable status for women in society—condemned sati, worked for abolition of the purdah system, discouraged child marriage and polygamy, crusaded for widow remarriage and for provisions of educational facilities. It also attacked casteism and untouchability though in these matters it attained only limited success.
The influence of the Brahmo Samaj, however, did not go much beyond Calcutta and, at most, Bengal. It did not have a lasting impact.

Prarthana Samaj-Founded by Atmaram Pandurang in 1867 in Bombay. Mahadeo Govind Ranade joined in 1870, did most work. Other leaders R.G. Bhandarkar & N.G. Chandavarkar. Emphasis on monotheism but more concerned on social reforms. There was a four-point social agenda also: (i) disapproval of caste system; (ii) women's education; (iii) widow remarriage; and (iv) raising the age of marriage for both males and females.

Young Bengal Movement & Henry Vivian Derozio-During the late 1820s and early 1830s, there emerged a radical, intellectual trend among the youth in Bengal, which came to be known as the 'Young Bengal Movement'. A young Anglo-Indian, Henry Vivian Derozio (1809–31), who taught at the Hindu College from 1826 to 1831, was the leader. The Derozians, however, failed to have a long-term impact. Derozians lacked any real link with the masses.

Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar-He believed in high moral values, was a deep humanist, and was generous to the poor. introduced Western thought in Sanskrit College to break the self-imposed isolation of Sanskritic learning. Vidyasagar started a movement in support of widow remarriage which resulted in legalisation of widow remarriage. He was also a crusader against child marriage and polygamy. He did much for the cause of women's education like organising 35 girls' school.

Balshastri Jambhekar-attacked brahminical orthodoxy and tried to reform popular Hinduism. He started the newspaper Darpan in 1832. Known as the father of Marathi journalism. In 1840, he started Digdarshan, which published articles on scientific subjects as well as history. founded the Bombay Native General Library and started the Native Improvement Society.

Paramhansa Mandali-Founded in 1849 in Maharashtra, the founders of the Paramahansa Mandali—Dadoba Pandurang, Mehtaji Durgaram and others. Ideolog was linked to Manav Dharma Sabha. Monotheism, encouraged freedom of thought, breaking caste rules, widow remarriage& women's education. Poona, Satara & other parts of Maharashtra.

Jyotirao & savitribai Phule-organised a powerful movement against upper caste domination and brahminical supremacy. Phule founded the Satyashodhak Samaj (Truth Seekers' Society) in 1873, with the leadership of the samaj coming from the backward classes, malis, telis, kunbis, saris, and dhangars. The main aims of the movement were (i) social service, and (ii) spread of education among women and lower caste people. Phule's works, Sarvajanik Satyadharma and Gulamgiri, became sources of inspiration for the common masses. Phule aimed at the complete abolition of the caste system and socio-economic inequalities; he was against Sanskritic Hinduism. Given title of Mahatma by Vithalrao Krishnaji Vandekar in 1888. Savitribai also began to teach women and children from the downtrodden castes including Mang and Mahar. She started the Mahila Seva Mandal to raise awareness about women's rights. Advocated widow remarriage. With her husband, she set up a home called Balhatya Pratibandhak Griha (home to prevent infanticide) in 1863. Savitribai wrote poetry, and two of her collections are Kavyaphule and Bavankashi Subodh Ratnakar.

Gopal Baba Walangkar-generally considered by Ambedkar to be the pioneer of the Dalit movement. Deeply influenced by Jyotiba Phule. Believed in Aryan invasion theory. founded the Anarya Dosh-Parihar Mandali (Society for the Removal of Evils Among the Non-Aryans). Monthly journal Vital Vidhvansak from 1888(Destroyer of Brahmanical or Ceremonial Pollution). In 1889, he followed with a pamphlet, Vital Viduvansan (Annihilation of Ceremonial Pollution), which spoke against the position of untouchables in society. He has been called "the first intellectual rebel from the Dalit community to have launched a scathing criticism of the caste system and the position of Dalits in it." He also wrote Hindu Dharma Darpan published in 1894. He contributed to Marathi language journals such as Sudharak and Deenbandhu to arouse awareness and inspire the depressed classes.

Kisan Faguji Bansod-He established the Chokhamela girls' school at Nagpur. Setting up his own press in 1910, Bansod published the journals Nirashrit Hind Nagarik, Vital Vidhvansak, and Majur Patrika. He was one of the secretaries of the All India Depressed Classes Conference in 1920.

Vitthal Ramji Shinde-(kar) influenced in his spiritual journey by the works of Tukaram, Eknath, and Ramdas. joined the Prarthana Samaj and worked towards the removal of untouchability in India. He expressed his opposition to the caste system, idol worship, and inequities forced on women and the depressed classes even as he was against meaningless rituals, the dominance of hereditary priesthood, and the very need for a priest to mediate between a devotee and God. He took part in the Civil Disobedience Movement and was imprisoned in the Yerawda Central Jail. Shinde was the author of Bharatiya Asprushyatecha Prashna.

Gopalhari Deshmukh 'Lokahitawadi'-(maha) wrote for a weekly Prabhakar under the pen name of Lokahitawadi on social reform issues. wrote against the evils of the caste system. He started a weekly, Hitechhu, and also played a leading role in founding the periodicals, Gyan Prakash, Indu Prakash, and Lokahitawadi.

Gopal Ganesh Agarkar-(Maha) first editor of Kesari, the journal started by Lokmanya Tilak. Later, he started his own periodical, Sudharak, which spoke against untouchability and the caste system.

The Servants of India Society-Founded by Gopal Krishna Gokhale in 1905 with help of MG Ranade. The aim of the society was to train national missionaries for the service of India; to promote, by all constitutional means, the true interests of the Indian people; and to prepare a cadre of selfless workers who were to devote their lives to the cause of the country in a religious spirit. Published Hitavada.

Social Service League-Narayan Malhar Joshi founded aim to secure for the masses better and reasonable conditions of life and work. Joshi also founded the All India Trade Union Congress (1920)

Ramakrishna Movement & Swami Vivekananda-Two objectives of the Ramakrishna movement were—(i) to bring into existence a band of monks dedicated to a life of renunciation and practical spirituality, from among whom teachers and workers would be sent out to spread the universal message of Vedanta as illustrated in the life of Ramakrishna, and (ii) in conjunction with lay disciples to carry on preaching, philanthropic and charitable works, looking upon all men, women and children, irrespective of caste, creed, or colour, as veritable manifestations of the Divine. First obective through Ramakrishna math, second through Ramakrishna Mission in 1897 by Vivekananda.

emphasised that Krishna, Hari, Ram, Christ, Allah are different names for the same God, and that there are many ways to God and salvation: “As many faiths, so many paths.” He used to say, “Service of man is the service of God.”

Swami Vivekananda-Narendranath Datta spread Ramakrishna’s message and tried to reconcile it to the needs of contemporary Indian society. He emerged as the preacher of neo-Hinduism. He subscribed to the Vedanta, which he considered a fully rational system with a superior approach. His mission was to bridge the gulf between paramartha (service) and vyavahara (behaviour), and between spirituality and day-to-day life. believed in the fundamental oneness of God and said, “For our own motherland a junction of the two great systems, Hinduism and Islam, is the only hope.” He believed that it was an insult to God and humanity to teach religion to a starving man. He pointed out that the masses needed two kinds of knowledge—secular knowledge about how to work for their economic uplift and the spiritual knowledge to have faith in themselves and strengthen their moral sense. At the Parliament of Religions held at Chicago in 1893, Swami Vivekananda made a great impression on people by his learned interpretations. The keynote of his opening address was the need for a healthy balance between spiritualism and materialism. Envisaging a new culture for the whole world, he called for a blend of the materialism of the West and the spiritualism of the East into a new harmony to produce happiness for mankind. He was a great humanist and used the Ramakrishna Mission for humanitarian relief and social work advocated the doctrine of service—the service of all beings. The service of jiva (living objects) is the worship of Siva. Life itself is religion. By service, the Divine exists within man. Vivekananda was for using technology and modern science in the service of mankind. Mission runs a number of schools, hospitals, dispensaries. It offers help to the afflicted in times of natural calamities like earthquakes, famines, floods, and epidemics. The Mission has developed into a worldwide organisation. It is a deeply religious body, but it is not a proselytising body.

Dayanand Saraswati & Arya Samaj-The first Arya Samaj unit was formally set up by him at Bombay in 1875, and later the headquarters of the Samaj were established at Lahore. Dayananda’s views were published in his famous work, Satyarth Prakash (The True Exposition). His vision of India included a classless and casteless society, a united India (religiously, socially, and nationally), and an India free from foreign rule, with Aryan religion being the common religion of all. He gave the slogan “Back to the Vedas”. education on Vedanta from Swami Virajananda in Mathura criticised later Hindu scriptures such as the Puranas. Dayananda strongly criticised the escapist Hindu belief in maya (illusion) as the running theme of all physical existence and the aim of human life as a struggle to attain moksha (salvation) through escape from this evil world to seek union with God. Instead, he advocated that God, soul, and matter (prakriti) were distinct and eternal entities and every individual had to work out his own salvation in the light of the eternal principles governing human conduct. Thus, he attacked the prevalent popular belief that every individual contributed and got back from the society according the principles of niyati (destiny). Dayananda believed in the theory of karma and reincarnation. Dayananda launched a frontal attack on Hindu orthodoxy, caste rigidities, untouchability, idolatry, polytheism, belief in magic, charms and animal sacrifices, taboo on sea voyages, feeding the dead through shraddhas, etc. Dayananda subscribed to the Vedic notion of chaturvarna system in which a person was identified as a brahmin, kshatriya, vaishya, or shudra not by birth but according to the occupation and merit of the person.

The ten guiding principles of the Arya Samaj are—

(i) God is the primary source of all true knowledge; (ii) God, as all-truth, all-knowledge, almighty, immortal, creator of Universe, is alone worthy of worship; (iii) the Vedas are the books of true knowledge; (iv) an Arya should always be ready to accept truth and abandon untruth; (v) dharma, that is, due consideration of right and wrong, should be the guiding principle of all actions; (vi) the principal aim of the Samaj is to promote world’s well-being in the material, spiritual and social sense; (vii) everybody should be treated with love and justice; (viii) ignorance is to be dispelled and knowledge increased; (ix) one’s own progress should depend on uplift of all others; (x) social well-being of mankind is to be placed above an individual’s well-being.

The Dayananda AngloVedic (D.A.V.) College was established in 1886 at Lahore. While the College Party favoured the govt curriculum and English education to meet economic and professional needs, the Mahatma Party was interested in introducing the study of Sanskrit and Vedic philosophy in the tradition of ancient gurukuls. In the end, the Arya Samaj split in 1893 over these issues. In its zeal to protect the Hindu society from the onslaught of Christianity and Islam, the Samaj started the shuddhi (purification) movement to reconvert to the Hindu fold the converts to Christianity and Islam. shuddhi movement also attempted to uplift those regarded as untouchables and outside the caste system of Hindus into pure caste Hindus.

Seva Sadan-Behramji M. Malabari founded alomgwith Diwan Dayaram Gidumal. His efforts led to the Age of Consent Act, regulating the age of consent for females. It catered to all castes and provided the destitute women with education, and medical and welfare services.

Dev Samaj-Founded in 1887 at Lahore by Shiv Narayan Agnihotri. emphasised on the eternity of the soul, the supremacy of the guru, and the need for good action. Teachings were compiled in a book, Deva Shastra. Agnihotri spoke against child marriage.

Dharma Sabha-Radhakant Deb founded this sabha in 1830. An orthodox society, it stood for the preservation of the status quo in socio-religious matters, opposing even the abolition of sati. However, it favoured the promotion of Western education, even for girls.

Bharat Dharma Mahamandala-stood for a defence of orthodox Hinduism against the teachings of the Arya Samajists, the Theosophists, and the Ramakrishna Mission. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya was a prominent figure.

Radhaswami Movt-Shiv Dayal Saheb, founded this movement in 1861. They believe in one supreme being, supremacy of the guru, a company of pious people (satsang), and a simple social life.

Sree Narayana Guru Dharma Paripalana(SNDP) Movt-started by Sree Narayana Guru Swamy (1856–1928) among the Ezhavas(26% of total popn, single largest caste group) of Kerala, who were a backward caste of toddy-tappers and were considered to be untouchable. The movement (Aruvippuram Movement) drew the famous poet Kumaran Asan as a disciple of Narayana Guru. In 1889, the Aruvippuram Kshetra Yogam was formed. The SNDP Yogam took up several issues for the Ezhavas, such as: (i) right of admission to public schools; (ii) recruitment to govt services; (iii) access to roads and entry to temples; and (iv) political representation.

Vokaliga Sangha- Anti- Brahmin movt in 1905

Justice Movt-started in madras Presidency by C.N. Mudaliar, T.M. Nair, and P. Tyagaraja to secure jobs and representation for the non-brahmins in the legislature.

Self Respect Movt-started by E.V. Ramaswamy Naicker, a Balija Naidu, in the mid-1920s. rejection of the brahminical religion and culture.

Temple Entry Movt-TK Madhavan in Travancore adminidtration. Vaikom Satyagraha led by KP Kesava

Indian Social Conference-Founded by M.G. Ranade and Raghunath Rao, can be called social reform cell of the INC. Advocated inter-caste marriages, opposed polygamy and kulinism. It launched the 'Pledge Movement' to inspire people to take a pledge against child marriage.

Wahabi/ Walliullah Movt-Two fold ideals of this movement: (i) desirability of harmony among the four schools of Muslim jurisprudence which had divided the Indian Muslims (he sought to integrate the best elements of the four schools); (ii) recognition of the role of individual conscience in religion where conflicting interpretations were derived from the Quran and the *Hadis.*India was considered to be dar-ul-Harb (land of the kafirs), and it needed to be converted to dar-ul-Islam (land of Islam). Initially, the movement was directed at the Sikhs in Punjab, but after the British annexation of Punjab (1849), the movement was directed against the British.

Titu Mir's Movt-Titu Mir adopted Wahabism and advocated the Sharia. He organised the Muslim peasants of Bengal against the landlords, who were mosly Hindu, and the British indigo planters.

Faraizi Movt-founded by Haji Shariatullah in 1819. East Bengal, and it aimed at the eradication of social innovations or un-Islamic practices current among the Muslims of the region and draw their attention to their duties as Muslims. Dudu Mian asked his followers not to pay rent.

Ahmadiyya Movt-founded by Mirza Ghulam Ahmad in 1889. described itself as the standard-bearer of Mohammedan Renaissance, and based itself, like the Brahmo Samaj, on the principles of universal religion of all humanity, opposing jihad. They believed in separating the mosque from the State as well as in human rights and tolerance.

Sir Syed Ahmed Khan & Aligarh Movt-SSAK earned nighthood in 1888. He advocated a critical approach and freedom of thought and not complete dependence on tradition or custom. started the Mohammedan Anglo-Oriental College (later, the Aligarh Muslim University) at Aligarh in 1875. position of women through better education and by opposing purdah and polygamy, advocating easy divorce, and condemning the system of piri and muridi. he opposed political activity by the Muslims. Unfortunately, in his enthusiasm to promote the educational and employment interests of the Muslims, he allowed himself to be used by the colonial govt in its obnoxious policy of divide and rule. magazine Tahdhib-ul-Akhlaq (Improvement of Manners and Morals). Aligarh Movt aimed at spreading: (i) modern education among Indian Muslims without weakening their allegiance to Islam; (ii) social reforms among Muslims relating to purdah, polygamy, widow remarriage, women's education, slavery, divorce, etc.

The Deoband School(Darul Uloom)- orthodox section among the Muslim ulema as a revivalist movement with the twin objectives of propagating pure teachings of the Quran and Hadis among Muslims and keeping alive the spirit of jihad against the foreign rulers. by Muhammad Qasim Nanautavi and Rashid Ahmad Gangohi. the aim of the Deoband Movement was moral and religious regeneration of the Muslim community. Shibli Numani, a supporter of the Deoband school, favoured the inclusion of English language and European sciences in the system of education. He founded the Nadwatal Ulama and Darul Uloom in Lucknow in 1894–96. He believed in the idealism of the Congress and cooperation between the Muslims and the Hindus of India to create a state in which both could live amicably.

Parsi Reform Movts-The Rahnumai Mazdayasnan Sabha (Religious Reform Association) was founded in 1851 by a group of Englisheducated Parsis for the "regeneration of the social conditions of the Parsis and the restoration of the Zoroastrian religion to its pristine purity". The movement had Naoroji Furdonji, Dadabhai Naoroji, K.R. Cama, and S.S. Bengalee as its leaders. message of reform was spread by the newspaper Rast Goftar (Truth-Teller).

Sikh Reform Movts-The Singh Sabha Movement was founded at Amritsar in 1873 with a two-fold objective: (i) to make available modern western education to the Sikhs, and (ii) to counter the proselytising activities of Christian missionaries as well as the Brahmo Samajists, Arya Samajists, and Muslim maulvis. The Akali Movement (also known as Gurudwara Reform Movement) was an offshoot of the Singh Sabha Movement. It aimed at liberating the Sikh gurudwaras from the control of corrupt Udasi mahants.

Theosophical Movt-A group of westerners led by Madame H.P. Blavatsky and Colonel M.S. Olcott, who were inspired by Indian thought and culture, founded the Theosophical Society in New York City, United States in 1875. In 1882, they shifted their headquarters to Adyar, on the outskirts of Madras (at that time) in India. It accepted the Hindu beliefs in reincarnation and karma, and drew inspiration from the philosophy of the Upanishads and samkhya, yoga, and Vedanta schools of thought. It aimed to work for universal brotherhood of humanity without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste, or colour. It opposed child marriage and advocated the abolition of caste discrimination, uplift of and improvement in the condition of widows. the movement became somewhat popular with the election of Annie Besant (1847–1933) as its president. its impact was limited to a small segment of the westernised class. Theosophists also had the effect of giving a false sense of pride to the Indians in their outdated and sometimes backward looking traditions and philosophy

Significance of Reform Movements-
Positive Aspects

- Liberation of individual from conformity out of fear psychosis.
- Worship made a more personal affair
- Cultural roots to the middle classes—thus mitigating the sense of humiliation; much needed self-respect gained
- Fostered secular outlook
- Encouraged social climate for modernisation
- Ended India's cultural, intellectual isolation from rest of the world
- Evolution of national consciousness

Negative Aspects

- Narrow social base
- Indirectly encouraged mysticism
- Overemphasis on religious, philosophical aspects of culture while underemphasising secular and moral aspects
- Hindus confined their praise to ancient Indian history and Muslims to medieval history—created a notion of two separate peoples and increased communal consciousness
- Historical process of evolution of composite culture arrested to some extent

Factors in Growth of Modern Nationalism-
Indian nationalism as a product of a mix of various factors:
(i) Worldwide upsurge of the concepts of nationalism and the right of self-determination initiated by the French Revolution
(ii) Indian Renaissance
(iii) Offshoot of modernisation initiated by the British in India
(iv) Strong reaction to British imperialist policies in India
(v) Understanding of Contradictions in Indian & Colonial Interests
(vi) Political, Administrative & Economic Unification of the country- From the nationalists' point of view, this process of unification had a two-fold effect: (a) The economic fate of the people of different regions got linked together; for instance, failure of crops in one region affected the prices and supply in another region.(b) Modern means of transport and communication brought people, especially the leaders, from different regions together. This was important for the exchange of political ideas and for mobilisation and organisation of public opinion on political and economic issues.
(vii)Western thought & Education

(viii) Role of Press & Literature
(ix) rediscovery of India's Past
(x) Progressive character of Socio-religious reform movements
(xi)Rise of Middle-Class intelligentsia
(xii) Impact of Contemporary Movts in world-Rise of a number of nations on the ruins of the Spanish and Portuguese empires in South America, and the national liberation movements of Greece and Italy in general and of Ireland in particular deeply influenced the nationalist ranks.
(xiii) Reactionaey Policies & Racial Arrogance of Rulers

Political Associations Before INC-
Bengal-
The Bangabhasha Prakasika Sabha(1836)
Zamindari Association-to safeguard the interests of the landlords
Bengal British India Society(1843)- the collection and dissemination of information relating to the actual condition of the people of British India.
British Indian Association(1851)- by merger of Landholder's society & Bengal British India Society, sent a petition to the British Parliament
The East India Association(1866)-Dadabhai Naoroji in London to promote Indian welfare
The Indian League was started in 1875 by Sisir Kumar Ghosh
The Indian Association of Calcutta (also known as the Indian National Association) superseded the Indian League and was founded in 1876 by younger nationalists of Bengal led by Surendranath Banerjea and Ananda Mohan Bose. most important of preCongress associations and aimed to "promote by every legitimate means the political, intellectual and material advancement of the people."l ater merged with the Indian National Congress in 1886.

Bombay-
Poona Sarvajanik Sabha(1867)-MG Ranade, bridge b/w govt & people
Bombay Presidency Association(1885)- Badruddin Tyabji, Pherozeshah Mehta, and K.T. Telang

Madras-
Madras Mahajan Sabha was founded in 1884 by M. Viraraghavachari (also, Veeraraghavachariar), B. Subramania Aiyer, and P. Ananda- charlu.

Pre-Congress Campaigns-
These campaigns were:
(i) for imposition of import duty on cotton (1875)
(ii) for Indianisation of govt service (1878–79)
(iii) against Lytton's Afghan adventure
(iv) against Arms Act (1878)
(v) against Vernacular Press Act (1878)
(vi) for right to join volunteer corps
(vii) against plantation labour and against Inland Emigration Act
(viii) in support of Ilbert Bill
(ix) for an All-India Fund for Political Agitation
(x) campaign in Britain to vote for pro-India party
(xi) against reduction in maximum age for appearing in Indian Civil Service; the Indian Association took up this question and organised an all-India agitation against it, popularly known as the Indian Civil Service agitation.

INC: Foundation & Moderate Phase-

First session of the Indian National Congress at Gokuldas Tejpal Sanskrit College in Bombay in December 1885. Safety Valve(Lala Lajpat Rai),Conspiracy Theory (RP Dutt) vs Lightning Conductor(GK Gokhale, Bipan Chandra)

Era of Moderates(1885-1905)
Imp. Leaders- Dadabhai Naoroji, Pherozeshah Mehta, D.E. Wacha, W.C. Bonnerjea, S.N. Banerjea
Moderate Approach- believed that the British basically wanted to be just to the Indians but were not aware of the real conditions. two-pronged methodology—one, create a strong public opinion to arouse consciousness and national spirit and then educate and unite people on common political questions; and two, persuade the British Govt and British public opinion to introduce reforms in India on the lines laid out by the nationalists. They used the method of 'prayer and petition' and if that failed, they resorted to constitutional agitation.
Contributions of Moderate nationalists-
Economic Critique of British Imperialism-Drain theory by Naoroji, demanded reduction in land revenue, abolition of salt tax, improvement in working conditions of plantation labour, reduction in military expenditure, and encouragement to modern industry through tariff protection and direct govt aid.
Constitutional Reforms & Propaganda in Legislature- From 1885 to 1892, the nationalist demands for constitutional reforms were centred around: (i) expansion of councils—i.e., greater participation of Indians in councils; and (ii) reform of councils—i.e., more powers to councils, especially greater control over finances. These reforms were severely criticised at Congress sessions, Now, they demanded: (i) a majority of elected Indians; and (ii) control over the budget, i.e., the power to vote upon and amend the budget.
Campaign for General Administrative Reforms- Indianisation of govt service, Call for separation of judicial from executive functions, Criticism of an oppressive and tyrannical bureaucracy and an expensive and time-consuming judicial system, Criticism of an aggressive foreign policy, Call for increase in expenditure on welfare (i.e., health, sanitation) & education, better treatment for Indian labour abroad
Protection of Civil Rights- right to speech, thought, association, and a free press.
Evaluation of early nationalists-
(i) They represented the most progressive forces of the time.
(ii) They were able to create a wide national awakening of all Indians having common interests and the need to rally around a common programme against a common enemy, and above all, the feeling of belonging to one nation.
(iii) They trained people in political work and popularised modern ideas.
(iv) They exposed the basically exploitative character of colonial rule, thus undermining its moral foundations.
(v) Their political work was based on hard realities, and not on shallow sentiments, religion, etc.
(vi) They were able to establish the basic political truth that India should be ruled in the interest of Indians.
(vii) They created a solid base for a more vigorous, militant, mass-based national movement in the years that followed.
(viii) However, they failed to widen their democratic base and the scope of their demands.
Attitude of Govt-Hostile from beginning, Called nationalists 'seditious brahmins', 'disloyal babus', 'a factory of sedition(defferin)', Divide & rule policy, Policy of 'carrot & stick'.

Era of Militant Nationalism(1905-1909)-
Reasons for Growth-

- Recognition of the True Nature of British Rule-British Govt not conceding demands,economic miseries like famine & bubonic plague, taking away of rights, no longer progressive socially and culturally, suppressing the spread of education, especially mass and technical education.

- Growth of Confidence & self respect
- Growth of Education
- International Influences like progress by Japan, defeat of Italian army by Ethiopians (1896), the Boer wars (1899– 1902) where the British faced reverses, and Japan's victory over Russia (1905), nationalist movements worldwide—in Ireland, Russia, Egypt, Turkey, Persia, and China.
- Reaction to Increasing Westernisation- thinkers like Vivekananda, DN Saraswati, BC Chaterjee exploded the myth of western superiority by referring to the richness of the Indian civilisation in the past
- Dissatisfaction with achievements of moderates- critical of the Three 'P's"—prayer, petition and protest—and described these methods as 'political mendicancy'.
- Reactionary Policies of Curzon like Official Secrets Act, the Indian Universities Act, the Calcutta Corporation Act, and, above all, the partition of Bengal
- Existence of a militant school of thought like Tilak,Ra Narain Bose, Aurobindo Ghosh, Bipin Chandra Pal, Lala Lajpat Rai, Vishnu Shastri Chiplunkar, Ashwini Kumar Dutta. The basic tenets of this school of thought were:
    - hatred for foreign rule; since no hope could be derived from it, Indians should work out their own salvation;
    - swaraj to be the goal of national movement;
    - direct political action required
    - belief in the capacity of the masses to challenge the authority;
    - personal sacrifices required and a true nationalist to be always ready for it.
- Emergence of a trained leadership

Partition of Bengal-putting the Bengalis under two administrations by dividing them:
(i) on the basis of language, thus reducing the Bengalis to a minority in Bengal itself (as in the new proposal Bengal proper was to have 17 million Bengalis and 37 million Hindi and Oriya speakers);
(ii) on the basis of religion, as the western half was to be a Hindu majority area (42 million out of a total 54 million) and the eastern half was to be a Muslim majority area (18 million out of a total of 31 million).

Anti-Partition Campaign under Moderates(1903-05)- petitions to the govt, public meetings, memoranda, and propaganda through pamphlets and newspapers such as Hitabadi, Sanjibani, and Bengalee. On August 7, 1905, with the passage of the Boycott Resolution in a massive meeting held in the Calcutta Townhall, the formal proclamation of Swadeshi Movement was made. Oct 16, 1905, the day of partition, processions singing Bande Mataram (which almost spontaneously became the theme song of the movement). 'Amar Sonar Bangla', the national anthem of present-day Bangladesh, was composed by RN Tagore and sung by huge crowds marching in the streets. Soon, the movement spread to other parts of the country—in Poona and Bombay under Tilak; in Punjab under Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh; in Delhi under Syed Haider Raza; and in Madras under Chidambaram Pillai.

Congress Position-INC meetng in 1905 resolved to (i) condemn the partition of Bengal and the reactionary policies of Curzon, and (ii) support the anti-partition and Swadeshi Movement of Bengal. Militant Nationalists wanted movt to be taken outside Bengal, moderates do not wanted to go that far. Congress Sesion 1906 declared goal of INC as "self-govt or swaraj like the United Kingdom or the colonies" of Australia or Canada. Dispute b/w moderates-extremist led to Surat Split (1907).

The Extremist Programme-Passive resistance in addition to Swadeshi & boycott of govt schools and colleges, govt service, courts, legislative councils, municipalities, govt titles, etc "Political freedom is the lifebreath of a nation," declared Aurobindo. Extremists gave the idea of India's independence the central place in India's politics.

New Forms of Struggle & Impact-

- Boycott of foreign Goods
- Public Meetings & Processions
- Corps of Volunteers or 'Samities' like the Swadesh Bandhab Samiti of Ashwini Kumar Dutta (in Barisal), Swadeshi Sangam in Tirunelveli, TN
- Imaginative use of Traditional Popular Festivals & Melas
- Emphasis given to Self-reliace
- Program of Swadeshi or national education like Raja Subodh Mullick made a contribution of Rs 100,000 towards the foundation of a national university in Bengal. A National Council of Education was set up on August 15, 1906, and the Bengal National College and Bengal Technical Institute were established. Satishchandra Mukherjee pioneered the national education movement by founding the Bhagabat Chatuspathi in 1895. He took a leading part in the formation of the National Council of Education.
- Swadeshi or Indigenous Enterprises like textile mills, soap and match factories, tanneries, banks, insurance companies, shops, etc.
- Impact in the Cultural Sphere- Amar Sonar Bangla by RN Tagore, Sudesha Geetham by Subramania Bharati, Abanindranath Tagore in painting, JC Bose, Prafullachandra roy in science

Extent of Mass participation- the social base of the movement expanded to include certain sections of the zamindari, the students, the women, and the lower middle classes in cities and towns. An attempt was also made to give political expression to economic grievances of the working class by organising strikes. But the movement was not able to garner support of the Muslims, especially the Muslim peasantry, because of a conscious government policy of divide and rule helped by overlap of class and community at places.

Annulement of Partition-It was decided to annul the partition of Bengal in 1911, mainly to curb the menace of revolutionary terrorism. The annulment came as a rude shock to the Muslim political elite. It was also decided to shift the capital to Delhi as a sop to the Muslims, as it was associated with Muslim glory, but the Muslims were not pleased. Bihar and Orissa were taken out of Bengal, and Assam was made a separate province.

Evaluation of Swadeshi Movt-
The Movt Fizzles out-Reasons-

- Govt Repression
- Failed to create an effective organisation or a party structure
- Rendered leaderless by 1908
- Internal squabbles among leders magnified by Surat Split
- Aroused people but could not tap the newly released energy
- Largely confined to upper & middle class & zamindars
- It is difficult to sustain a mass-based movt at high pitch for too long.

Movement a Turning Point-

● It proved to be a 'leap forward' in more ways than one. Hitherto untouched sections—students, women, workers, some sections of urban and rural population—participated. All the major trends of the national movement, from conservative moderation to political extremism, from revolutionary activities to incipient socialism, from petitions and prayers to passive resistance and non-cooperation emerged during the Swadeshi Movement.

● The richness of the movement was not confined to the political sphere, but encompassed art, literature, science, and industry also.

● People were aroused from slumber and now they learned to take bold political positions and participate in new forms of political work.
● The swadeshi campaign undermined the hegemony of colonial ideas and institutions.
● The future struggle was to draw heavily from the experience gained.

Differences between Moderates and Extremists

Moderates	Extremists
1. Social base—zamindars and upper middle classes in towns.	1. Social base—educated middle and lower middle classes in towns.
2. Ideological inspiration—western liberal thought and European history.	2. Ideological inspiration—Indian history, cultural heritage, and Hindu traditional symbols.
3. Believed in England's providential mission in India.	3. Rejected 'providential mission theory' as an illusion.
4. Believed political connections with Britain to be in India's social, political, and cultural interests.	4. Believed that political connections with Britain would perpetuate British exploitation of India.
5. Professed loyalty to the British Crown.	5. Believed that the British Crown was unworthy of claiming Indian loyalty.
6. Believed that the movement should be limited to middle-class intelligentsia; masses not yet ready for participation in political work.	6. Had immense faith in the capacity of masses to participate and to make sacrifices.
7. Demanded constitutional reforms and share for Indians in services.	7. Demanded swaraj as the panacea for Indian ills.
8. Insisted on the use of constitutional methods only.	8. Did not hesitate to use extra-constitutional methods like boycott and passive resistance to achieve their objectives.
9. They were patriots and did not play the role of a comprador class.	9. They were patriots who made sacrifices for the sake of the country.

Surat Split(1907)- The Moderates failed to realise that the council reforms were meant by the government more to isolate the Extremists than to reward the Moderates. The Extremists did not realise that the Moderates could act as their front line of defence against state repression. And neither side realised that in a vast country like India ruled by a strong imperialist power, only a broad-based nationalist movement could succeed.

Govt Repression-Massive attack on extremists. 5 new laws b/w 1907 & 1911. These were: Indian Newspapers (Incitement to Offences) Act, 1908; Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908; and the Indian Press Act, 1910. Tilak, the main Extremist leader, was tried in 1909 for sedition for what he had written in 1908 in his Kesari about a bomb thrown by Bengal revolutionaries in Muzaffarpur. Aurobindo and B.C. Pal retired from active politics. Lajpat Rai left for abroad. The Extremists were not able to organise an effective alternative party to sustain the movement. The Moderates were left with no popular base or support, especially as the youth rallied behind the Extremists. Carrot & Stick Policy of Govt.

Morley-Minto Reforms of 1909-

- Number of elected members in Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils increased—elected non-officials still in minority.
- Non-officials to be elected indirectly—thus elections introduced for the first time.
- Separate electorates introduced for Muslims
- Legislatures could pass resolutions, ask questions and supplementaries, vote separate items of the budget.
- One Indian to be on viceroy's executive council(Satyendra Sinha, first in 1909). Aimed at dividing the nationalist ranks and at rallying the Moderates and the Muslims to the government's side.
- No responsibility entrusted to legislators—this resulted in thought-less criticism sometimes.
- System of election was too indirect.
- According to Sumit Sarkar, in the Imperial Legislative Council, of the total 69 members, 37 were to be the officials and of the 32 non-officials, 5 were to be nominated. Of the 27 elected non-officials, 8 seats were reserved for the Muslims under separate electorates (only Muslims could vote here for the Muslim candidates), while 4 seats were reserved for the British capitalists, 2 for the landlords, and 13 seats came under general electorate.

What the reforms of 1909 gave to the people of the country was a shadow rather than substance. The people had demanded self-government, but what they were given instead was 'benevolent despotism'.

Revolutionary Activities- First Phase(1907-17)
Reasons for Emergence-

- Younger elements not ready to retreat after the decline of open phase
- Leadership's failure to tap revolutionary energies of the youth
- Government repression left no peaceful avenues open for protest.

Ideology
Assassinate unpopular officials, thus strike terror in the hearts of rulers and arouse people to expel the British with force; based on individual heroic actions on lines of Irish nationalists or Russian nihilists and not a mass-based countrywide struggle.

A Survey of Revolutionary Activities
Bengal

- 1902—First revolutionary groups in Midnapore and Calcutta (The Anushilan Samiti)
- 1906— Yugantar, the revolutionary weekly started By 1905-06—Several newspapers started advocating revolutionary terrorism.

Revolutionary activity by Lala Lajpat Rai, Ajit Singh, Aga Haidar Syed Haidar Raza, Bhai Parmanand, Lalchand 'Falak', Sufi Ambaprasad
Revolutionary Activity Abroad

- 1905—Shyamji Krishnavarma set up Indian Home Rule Society and India House and brought out journal The Sociologist in London.
- 1909—Madan Lal Dhingra murdered Curzon-Wyllie; Madame Bhikaji Cama operated from Paris and Geneva and brought out journal Bande Mataram.
- Ajit Singh also active Berlin Committee for Indian Independence established by Virendranath Chattopadhyay and others Missions sent to Baghdad, Persia, Turkey, Kabul.
- In North America, the Ghadr was organised by Lala Hardayal, Ramchandra, Bhawan Singh, Kartar Singh Saraba, Barkatullah, Bhai Parmanand.

The Ghadr Programme

- Assassinate officials
- Publish revolutionary literature

- Work among Indian troops abroad and raise funds
- Bring about a simultaneous revolt in all colonies of Britain.
- Attempt to bring about an armed revolt in India on February 21, 1915 amidst favourable conditions created by the outbreak of First World War and the Komagata Maru incident (September 1914). The plan was foiled due to treachery.
- Defence of India Act, 1915 passed primarily to deal with the Ghadrites

First World War & Nationalist Response-
The nationalist response to British participation in the First World War was three-fold:
(i) the Moderates supported the empire in the war as a matter of duty;
(ii) the Extremists, including Tilak (who was released in June 1914), supported the war efforts in the mistaken belief that Britain would repay India's loyalty with gratitude in the form of selfgovernment;
(iii) the revolutionaries decided to utilise the opportunity to wage a war on British rule and liberate the country.
Factors leading to the Home Rule League Movement-
(i) A section of the nationalists felt that popular pressure was required to attain concessions from the government.
(ii) The Moderates were disillusioned with the Morley Minto reforms.
(iii) People were feeling the burden of wartime miseries caused by high taxation and a rise in prices, and were ready to participate in any aggressive movement of protest.
(iv) The war, being fought among the major imperialist powers of the day and backed by naked propaganda against each other, exposed the myth of white superiority.
(v) Tilak was ready to assume leadership after his release in June 1914, and had made conciliatory gestures-to the government reassuring it of his loyalty and to the Moderates that he wanted, like the Irish Home Rulers, a reform of the administration and not an overthrow of the government. He also admitted that the acts of violence had only served to retard the pace of political progress in India. He urged all Indians to assist the British government in its hour of crisis.
(vi) Annie Besant, the Irish theosophist based in India since 1896, had decided to enlarge the sphere of her activities to include the building of a movement for home rule on the lines of the Irish Home Rule Leagues.
The Leagues-
Tilak's League
Tilak set up his Indian Home Rule League in April 1916. Tilak held his first Home Rule meeting at Belgaum. Poona was the headquarters of his league. His league was restricted to Maharashtra (excluding Bombay city), Karnataka, Central Provinces, and Berar. It had six branches and the demands included swarajya, formation of linguistic states and education in the vernacular.
Besant's League
Annie Besant set up her All-India Home Rule League in September 1916 in Madras (now Chennai) and covered the rest of India (including Bombay city). It had 200 branches, was loosely organised as compared to Tilak's league and had George Arundale as the organising secretary. Besides Arundale, the main work was done by B.W. Wadia and C.P. Ramaswamy Aiyar.
The Home Rule League Programme-
The League campaign aimed to convey to the common man the message of home rule as self-government. The aim was to be achieved by promoting political education and discussion through public meetings, organising libraries and reading rooms, organising classes for students on politics, carrying out propaganda through newspapers, pamphlets, posters, illustrated post-cards, plays, religious songs, etc., collecting funds, organising social work, and participating in local government activities. later joined by Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru, Bhulabhai Desai, Chittaranjan Das, K.M. Munshi, B. Chakravarti, Saifuddin Kitchlew, Madan Mohan Malaviya, Muhammad Ali Jinnah, Tej Bahadur Sapru, and Lala Lajpat Rai. Some of these leaders became heads of local branches of Annie Besant's League. Muhammad Ali Jinnah led the Bombay division. Many of the Moderate

Congressmen who were disillusioned with Congress inactivity, and some members of Gokhale's Servants of India Society. Anglo-Indians, most of the Muslims and non-brahmins from the South did not join.
Govt Attitude-Severe Repression, especially in Madras. Case aginst Tilak, Annie Besant & her associates arrested.
Why the agitation faded out in 1919-
(i) There was a lack of effective organisation.
(ii) Communal riots were witnessed during 1917–18.
(iii) The Moderates who had joined the Congress after Annie Besant's arrest were pacified by talk of reforms (contained in Montagu's statement of August 1917 which held self-government as the long-term goal of the British rule in India) and Besant's release.
(iv) Talk of passive resistance by the Extremists kept the Moderates away from activity from September 1918 onwards.
(v) The Montagu-Chelmsford reforms, which became known in July 1918, further divided the nationalist ranks. Annie Besant herself was in two minds about the use of the league after the announcement of the reforms. Annie Besant vacillated over her response to the reforms and the techniques of passive resistance.
(vi) Tilak had to go abroad (September 1918) in connection with a libel case against Valentine Chirol whose book, Indian Unrest, had featured Tilak as responsible for the agitational politics that had developed in India. With Besant unable to give a positive lead and Tilak away in England, the movement was left leaderless.
(vii) Gandhi's fresh approach to the struggle for freedom was slowly but surely catching the imagination of the people, and the mass movement that was gathering momentum pushed the home rule movement onto the side lines till it petered out.
Positive Gains-
(i) The movement shifted the emphasis from the educated elite to the masses and permanently deflected the movement from the course mapped by the Moderates.
(ii) It created an organisational link between the town and the country, which was to prove crucial in later years when the national movement entered its mass phase in a true sense.
(iii) It created a generation of ardent nationalists.
(iv) It prepared the masses for politics of the Gandhian style.
(v) The August 1917 declaration of Montagu and the Montford reforms were influenced by the Home Rule agitation.
(vi) The efforts of Tilak and Annie Besant towards the Moderate-Extremist reunion at Lucknow (1916) revived the Congress as an effective instrument of Indian nationalism.
(vii) The home rule movement lent a new dimension and a sense of urgency to the national movt.
Lucknow Session of INC(1916)-Presided by Ambika Charan Majumdar, readmission of extremists to Congress, Lucknow pact b/w Congress & Muslim League.
Reasons for change in League's Attitude-
(i)Britain's refusal to help Turkey (ruled by the Khalifa) in its wars in Balkans(1912-13) & with Italy(1911) angered Muslims.
(ii)Annulment of partition of Bengal in 1911 had annoyed those sections of the Muslims who had supported the partition.
(iii) The refusal of the British government in India to set up a university at Aligarh with powers to affiliate colleges all over India also alienated some Muslims.
(iv) The younger League members were turning to bolder nationalist politics and were trying to outgrow the limited political outlook of the Aligarh school. the goal of self-government similar to that of the Congress brought both sides closer.
(v) Younger Muslims were infuriated by the government repression during the First World War. Maulana Azad's Al Hilal and Mohammad Ali's Comrade faced suppression, while the leaders such as Ali brothers, Maulana Azad and Hasrat Mohani faced internment. This generated antiimperialist sentiments among the 'Young Party'.

Nature of Pact-League agreed to present joint constitutional demands with the Congress to the government, the Congress accepted the Muslim League's position on separate electorates. The joint demands were:
● Government should declare that it would confer selfgovernment on Indians at an early date.
● The representative assemblies at the central as well as provincial level should be further expanded with an elected majority and more powers given to them.
● The term of the legislative council should be five years.
● The salaries of the Secretary of State for India should be paid by the British treasury and not drawn from Indian funds.
● Half the members of the viceroy's and provincial governors' executive councils should be Indians.
Critical Comments-
Lucknow pact demands were just a significantly expanded version of Morley-Minto reforms. Separate electorate for Muslims was a major landmark in the evolution of the two-nation theory by the Muslim League. while the leaders of the two groups came together, efforts to bring together the masses from the two communities were not considered.
Montagu's Statement of August Declaration of 1917-The statement said: "The government policy is of an increasing participation of Indians in every branch of administration and gradual development of selfgoverning institutions with a view to the progressive realisation of responsible government in India as an integral part of the British Empire."
Indian Obections-The objections of the Indian leaders to Montagu's statement were two-fold:
(i) No specific time frame was given.
(ii) The govt alone was to decide nature and timing of advance towards a responsible govt, and the Indians were resentful that the British would decide what was good and what was bad for Indians.

Era of Mass Nationalism Begins (1919-39)
Why nationalist resurgence now?

- Post war economic hardships-Industries(increase in prices, recession, increased foreign investment),workers & artisans(unemployment & high prices), Peasantry(high taxation & poverty), Soldiers(gave idea of their experience to rural folk), Educated urban classs(unemployment, acute awareness of racism)
- Expectations of political Gains for cooperation in the war
- National Disillusionment(promise an era of democracy and selfdetermination after the war) with Imperialism worldwide(esurgence of militant nationalist activity throughout Asia and Africa—in Turkey, Egypt, Ireland, Iran, Afghanistan, Burma, Malaya, the Philippines, Indonesia, Indo-China, China, and Korea.)
- Impact of Russian Revolution- the message that immense power lay with the people, and that the masses were capable of challenging the mightiest of tyrants provided they were organised, united, and determined.

Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms & GoI Act, 1919-
Main Features-
Provincial Govt-Intro of Dyarchy-

- Executive-(i) Dyarchy, i.e., rule of two—executive councillors and popular ministers—was introduced. The governor was to be the executive head in the province.
  (ii) Subjects were divided into two lists: 'reserved' which included subjects such as law and order, finance, land revenue, irrigation, etc., and 'transferred' subjects such as education, health, local government, industry, agriculture, excise, etc. The reserved subjects were to be administered by the governor through his executive council of bureaucrats, and the transferred subjects were to be administered by ministers nominated from among the elected members of the legislative council.

(iii) The ministers were to be responsible to the legislature and had to resign if a no-confidence motion was passed against them by the legislature, while the executive councillors were not to be responsible to the legislature.
(iv) In case of failure of constitutional machinery in the province the governor could take over the administration of transferred subjects also.
(v) The secretary of state for India and the governor general could interfere in respect of reserved subjects while in respect of the transferred subjects, the scope for their interference was restricted.

- Legislature (i) Provincial legislative councils were further expanded and 70 per cent of the members were to be elected.
  (ii) The system of communal and class electorates was further consolidated.
  (iii) Women were also given the right to vote.
  (iv) The legislative councils could initiate legislation, but the governor's assent was required. The governor could veto bills and issue ordinances.
  (v) The legislative councils could reject the budget, but the governor could restore it, if necessary.
  (vi) The legislators enjoyed freedom of speech.

Central Govt- Still without responsible Govt-

- Executive (i) The governor general was to be the chief executive authority.
  (ii) There were to be two lists for administration— central and provincial.
  (iii) In the viceroy's executive council of eight, three were to be Indians.
  (iv) The governor general retained full control over the reserved subjects in the provinces.
  (v) The governor-general could restore cuts in grants, certify bills rejected by the central legislature, and issue ordinances.
- Legislature (i) A bicameral arrangement was introduced. The lower house or Central Legislative Assembly would consist of 145 members (41 nominated and 104 elected— 52 General, 30 Muslims, 2 Sikhs, 20 Special), and the upper house or Council of State would have 60 members, of which 26 were to be nominated and 34 elected—20 General, 10 Muslims, 3 Europeans, and 1 Sikh (as per the figures given by Subhash Kashyap).
  (ii) The Council of State had a tenure of 5 years and had only male members, while the Central Legislative Assembly had a tenure of 3 years.
  (iii) The legislators could ask questions and supplementaries, pass adjournment motions, and vote a part of the budget, but 75 per cent of the budget was still not votable.
  Some Indians found their way into important committees, including finance.
- On the home government (in Britain) front, the Government of India Act, 1919 made an important change— the Secretary of State for India was henceforth to be paid out of the British exchequer.

Drawbacks-

- Very limited franchise(1.5 million from a popn of 260 million)
- At centre, legislature had no ctrl over viceroy & his executive council.
- Division of subjects not satisfactory at centre.
- Allocation of seats for central legislature to provinces was based on 'importance' of provinces-for instance, Punjab's military importance and Bombay's commercial importance.
- At the level of provinces, division of subjects and parallel administration of two parts was irrational and, hence, unworkable. Subjects like irrigation, finance, police, press, and justice were 'reserved'.

- The provincial ministers had no control over finances and over the bureaucrats; this would lead to constant friction between the two. Ministers were often not consulted on important matters too; in fact, they could be overruled

Congress Reaction- disappointing & unsatisfactory

Making of Gandhi-

Early Career & experiments with truth in South Africa-studied in Engand, client Dada Abdullah, saw plight of Asians & Africans in South Africa, white racism.

Moderate Phase of Struggle(1894-1906)-Petitions & Memorials to authorities in SA & Britain. To unite different sections of Indians, he set up the Natal Indian Congress and started a paper Indian Opinion.

Phase of Passive Resistance/ Satyagraha(1906-14)- Satyagraha against Registration Certificates(1906), Campaigns against Restrictions on Indian Migration, Campaign against Poll Tax & Invalidation of Indian Marriages, Protest against Transvaal Immigration Act

Gandhi's Experience in SA- found that masses have immense capacity, able to unite Indians of digg religion & classes, realised that at times unpopular decisions hv to b taken, evolve his style of leadership & politics

Gandhi's Technique of Satyagraha-

- A satyagrahi was not to submit to what he considered as wrong, but was to always remain truthful, non-violent, and fearless.
- A satyagrahi works on the principles of withdrawal of cooperation and boycott.
- Methods of satyagraha include non-payment of taxes, and declining honours and positions of authority.
- A satyagrahi should be ready to accept suffering in his struggle against the wrongdoer. This suffering was to be a part of his love for truth.
- Even while carrying out his struggle against the wrongdoer, a true satyagrahi would have no ill feeling for the wrongdoer; hatred would be alien to his nature.
- A true satyagrahi would never bow before the evil, whatever the consequence.
- Only the brave and strong could practise satyagraha; it was not for the weak and cowardly. Even violence was preferred to cowardice. Thought was never to be separated from practice. In other words, ends could not justify the means.

Gandhi in India-

Champaran Satyagraha(1917)-First Civil Disobedience-Rajkumar Shukla, Indigo planters, Tinkathia system(3/20 part), German synthetic dye, high rent & ilegal due, joined by Rajendra Prasad, Mazhar-ul-Haq, Mahadev Desai, Narhari Parekh, and J.B. Kripalani, compromise achieved, Other popular leaders associated with Champaran Satyagraha were Brajkishore Prasad, Anugrah Narayan Sinha, Ramnavmi Prasad, and Shambhusharan Varma.

Ahmedabad Mill Strike(1918)- First Hunger Strike-dispute b/w cotton mill owners & worker over dcontinuation of plague bonus. Workers demanded for 50% hike in wages, mill owners ready for 20%, workers reached out to Anusuya Sarabhai, brother of Ambalal Sarabhai(one of the mill owners and the president of the Ahmedabad Mill Owners Association), she reached out to Gandhi, Gandhi asked workers to demand for 35% hike, advised for non-violent strike, 35% hike given

Kheda Satyagraha(1918)- First Non-Cooperation- Drought, crops failed in kheda, remission asked by farmers acc. to revenue code, govt seized property, revolt against it, Gandhi, however, was mainly the spiritual head of the struggle. It was Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and a group of other devoted Gandhians, namely, Narahari Parikh, Mohanlal Pandya, and Ravi Shankar Vyas, who went around the villages, organised the villagers and told them what to do, and gave the necessary pol. Leadership. Ultimately, the government sought to bring about an agreement with the farmers. It agreed to suspend the tax for the year in question, and for the next; reduce the increase in rate; and return all the confiscated property.

Rowlatt Act-Extension to the Defence of India Regulations Act, 1915. Officially called Anarchical and Revolutionary Crimes Act. The act allowed political activists to be tried without juries or even imprisoned without trial. It allowed arrest of Indians without warrant on the mere suspicion of 'treason'. Such suspects could be tried in secrecy without recourse to legal help. A special cell consisting of three high court judges was to try such suspects, and there was no court of appeal above that panel. This panel could even accept evidence not acceptable under the Indian Evidences Act. The law of habeas corpus, the basis of civil liberty, was sought to be suspended. There was strict control over the press, and the government was armed with a variety of powers to deal with anything the authorities chose to consider as terrorism or revolutionary tactics.

Satyagraha against the Rowlatt Act-First Mass Strike-Indians felt betrayed-more so Gandhi, called it 'Black Act', called for mass protest, Satyagraha Sabha, observance of a nationwide hartal (strike) accompanied by fasting and prayer, and civil disobedience against specific laws, and courting arrest and imprisonment. Launched on Apr 6, 1919 but large scale violent, anti-British demonstrations in Calcutta, Bombay, Delhi, Ahmedabad, etc. Especially in Punjab before launch. April 1919 saw the biggest and the most violent anti-British upsurge since 1857.

Jallianwala Bagh Massacre(Apr 13, 1919)- On April 9, two nationalist leaders, Saifuddin Kitchlew and Dr Satyapal, were arrested by the British officials without any provocation, led to resentment & violent protest. Dyer, however, issued a proclamation on April 13 (which was also Baisakhi), forbidding people from leaving the city without a pass and from organising demonstrations or processions, or assembling in groups of more than three. Large crowd in Jallianwala Bagh, majority for Baisakhi, some for protests, Troops under orders of General Dyer opened fire on unarmed crowd. According to official British Indian sources, 379 were identified dead, and approximately 1,100 were wounded. The Indian National Congress, on the other hand, estimated more than 1,500 were injured, and approximately 1,000 were killed. But it is precisely known that 1,650 bullets were fired into the crowd. Entire nation stunned, Tagore gave knighthood, Gandhi gave title of Kaiser-i-Hind. Gandhi was overwhelmed by the atmosphere of total violence and withdrew the movement on April 18, 1919. Seen in an objective way, Dyer ensured the beginning of the end of the British Raj. According to the historian, A.P.J Taylor, the Jallianwala Bagh massacre was the "decisive moment when Indians were alienated from British rule". For Bhagat Singh's Bharat Naujawan Sabha, the massacre was to act as a symbol that would help overcome the apathy that came in the wake of the end of the non-cooperation movement. Udham Singh, who bore the name, Ram Mohammad Singh Azad, later assassinated Michael O'Dwyer, the Lieutenant Governor.

The Hunter Committee of Inquiry-on October 14, 1919, the Government of India announced the formation of the Disorders Inquiry Committee to "investigate the recent disturbances in Bombay, Delhi and Punjab, about their causes, and the measures taken to cope with them". 3 Indians among the members. Dyer was called before the committee. He was confident that what he had done was only his duty. Dyer stated that his intentions had been to strike terror throughout the Punjab and in doing so, reduce the moral stature of the 'rebels'. the final report, released in March 1920, unanimously condemned Dyer's actions. The report stated that the lack of notice to disperse from the Bagh in the beginning was an error; the length of firing showed a grave error; Dyer's motive of producing a sufficient moral effect was to be condemned; Dyer had overstepped the bounds of his authority; there had been no conspiracy to overthrow British rule in Punjab. Dyer's actions had been "inhuman and un-British" and had greatly injured the image of British rule in India. before the Hunter Committee began its proceedings, the government had passed an Indemnity Act for the protection of its officers. No penal or disciplinary action against Dyre.Churchill (no lover of Indians) condemned what had happened at Amritsar. He called it “monstrous”. A former prime minister of Britain, H.H. Asquith called it “one of the worst outrages in the whole of our history”. Congress committee criticised Dyer’s act as inhuman and also said that there was no justification in the introduction of the martial law in Punjab.

Non-Cooperation Movt & Khilafat Aandolan-

Background-

- Alarming economic situation of country in post-war years.
- Rowlatt Act, imposition of martial law in Pun, Jalianwala Bagh Massacre
- Hunter committee proved to be an eyewash. House of Lords (of the British Parliament) endorsed General Dyer’s action and the British public showed solidarity with General Dyer by helping The Morning Post collect 30,000 pounds for him.
- Montford reforms with their ill-conceived scheme of dyarchy failed to satisfy rising demand of Indians for self-govt.
- Lucknow Pact(1916) , Radical nationalist muslims becoming more influential than conservative ones.

The Khilafat Issue-angered by the treatment meted out to Turkey by the British after the First World War. Muslims regarded the sultan of Turkey as their spiritual leader, Khalifa. Indian Muslims demanded: Khalifa’s ctrl over Muslim sacred places, khailfa shud be left with sufficient territories. In early 1919, a Khilafat Committee was formed under the leadership of the Ali brothers (Shaukat Ali and Muhammad Ali), Maulana Azad, Ajmal Khan, and Hasrat Mohani, to force the British govt to change its attitude towards Turkey. In early 1919, a Khilafat Committee was formed under the leadership of the Ali brothers (Shaukat Ali and Muhammad Ali), Maulana Azad, Ajmal Khan, and Hasrat Mohani, to force the British government to change its attitude towards Turkey. Gandhi, who was the president of the All India Khilafat Committee, saw in the issue a platform from which mass and united noncooperation could be declared against the Government.

Congress Stand on Khilafat Question-Gandhi was in favour of launching satyagraha and non-cooperation against the government on the Khilafat issue. Congress was not united on this form of political action. Tilak was skeptical. Later, however, approval of Congress because: golden oppor to cement Hindu-Muslim unity, Congress losing faith in constitutional struggle, congress aware that masses were eager to give expression to their discontent.

The Non-Cooperation Khilafat Movement

February 1920 In early 1920, a joint Hindu-Muslim deputation was sent to the viceroy to seek redress of grievances on the issue of Khilafat, but the mission proved abortive.

In February 1920, Gandhi announced that the issues of Punjab wrongs and constitutional advance had been over-shadowed by the Khilafat question and that he would soon lead a movement of non-cooperation if the terms of the peace treaty failed to satisfy the Indian Muslims.

May 1920 The Treaty of Sevres with Turkey, signed in May 1920, completely dismembered Turkey.

June 1920 An all-party conference at Allahabad approved a programme of boycott of schools, colleges, and law courts, and asked Gandhi to lead it.

ward committees were organised; and entry fee was reduced to four annas.

(iv) Gandhi declared that if the non-cooperation programme was implemented completely, swaraj would be ushered in within a year.

Many groups of revolutionary terrorists, especially those from Bengal, also pledged support to the Congress programme.

At this stage, some leaders like Muhammad Ali Jinnah, Annie Besant, G.S. Kharpade, and B.C. Pal left the Congress as they believed in a constitutional and lawful struggle, while some others like Surendranath Banerjea founded the Indian National Liberal Federation and played a minor role in national politics henceforward.

The adoption by the Congress of the non-cooperation movement initiated earlier by the Khilafat Committee gave it a new energy, and the years 1921 and 1922 saw an unprecedented popular upsurge.

August 31, 1920 The Khilafat Committee started a campaign of non-cooperation, and the movement was formally launched. (Tilak had, incidentally, breathed his last on August 1, 1920.)

September 1920 At a special session in Calcutta, the Congress approved a non-cooperation programme till the Punjab and Khilafat wrongs were removed and swaraj was established. The programme was to include:

- boycott of government schools and colleges;
- boycott of law courts and dispensation of justice through panchayats instead;
- boycott of legislative councils (there were some differences over this as some leaders like C.R. Das were not willing to include a boycott of councils, but bowed to Congress discipline; these leaders boycotted elections held in November 1920, and the majority of the voters too stayed away);
- boycott of foreign cloth and use of khadi instead; also practice of hand-spinning to be done;
- renunciation of government honours and titles; the second phase could include mass civil disobedience including resignation from government service, and non-payment of taxes.

During the movement, the participants were supposed to work for Hindu-Muslim unity and for removal of untouchability, all the time remaining non-violent.

December 1920 At the Nagpur session of the Indian National Congress:

(i) The programme of non-cooperation was endorsed.

(ii) An important change was made in the Congress creed: now, instead of having the attainment of self-government through constitutional means as its goal, the Congress decided to have the attainment of swaraj through peaceful and legitimate means, thus committing itself to an extra-constitutional mass struggle.

(iii) Some important organisational changes were made: a congress working committee (CWC) of 15 members was set up to lead the Congress from now onwards; provincial congress committees on linguistic basis were organised;

Spread of the Movement

Gandhi accompanied by the Ali brothers undertook a nationwide tour. Thousands of students left government schools and colleges and joined around 800 national schools and colleges which cropped up during this time. These educational institutions were organised under the leadership of Acharya Narendra Dev, C.R. Das, Lala Lajpat Rai, Zakir Hussain, Subhash Bose (who became the principal of National College at Calcutta) and included Jamia Millia at Aligarh, Kashi Vidyapeeth, Gujarat Vidyapeeth, and Bihar Vidyapeeth.

Many lawyers gave up their practice, some of whom were Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru, C.R. Das, C. Rajagopalachari, Saifuddin Kitchlew, Vallabhbhai Patel, Asaf Ali, T. Prakasam, and Rajendra Prasad.

Heaps of foreign cloth were burnt publicly and their imports fell by half. Picketing of shops selling foreign liquor and of toddy shops was undertaken at many places.

The Tilak Swaraj Fund was oversubscribed and one crore rupees were collected.

Congress volunteer corps emerged as the parallel police.

In July 1921, the Ali brothers gave a call to the Muslims to resign from the army as it was unreligious. The Ali brothers were arrested for this in September. Gandhi echoed their call and asked local Congress committees to pass similar resolutions to that effect.

Now, the Congress gave a call to local Congress bodies to start civil disobedience if it was thought that the people were ready for it. Already, a no-tax movement against union board taxes in Midnapore (Bengal) and in Guntur (Andhra) was going on.

In Assam, strikes in tea plantations, steamer services, and Assam-Bengal Railways had been organised. J.M. Sengupta was a prominent leader in these strikes.

In November 1921, the visit of the Prince of Wales to India invited strikes and demonstrations.

The spirit of defiance and unrest gave rise to many local struggles such as Awadh Kisan Movement (UP), Eka Movement (UP), Mappila Revolt (Malabar), and the Sikh agitation for the removal of mahants in Punjab.

People's Response-

Middle Class-led the movement at the beginning, but later they showed a lot of reservations. The response to the call for resignation from the government service, surrendering of titles, etc., was not taken seriously. Comparative newcomers like Rajendra Prasad in Bihar and Vallabhbhai Patel in Gujarat provided solid support.

Business Class- supported as benefited from Swadeshi, But a section of the big business remained sceptical towards the movement.

Peasants- Massive participation, peasants turned against the landlords and the traders. The movt gave an opportunity to the toiling masses to express their real feelings against the British as well as against their Indian masters and oppressors (landlords and traders).

Students- Active volunteers, left govt schools & colleges & came in newly opened national institutions like Kashi Vidyapeeth, Jamia & others.

Women- gave up purdah& offered their ornaments for Tilak fund.joined in large nos & took active part in picketng b4 shops selling foreign cloth & liquor.

Hindu-Muslim Unity- The massive participation of Muslims and the maintenance of communal unity, despite the events like Moppila Uprisings, were great achievements.

Govt Response-Talks b/w Gandhi & Reading, Govt came heavily on protestors. Volunteer corps were declared illegal, public meetings were banned, the press was gagged, and most of the leaders barring Gandhi were arrested.

Last Phase of Movt- Gandhi under increasing pressure from INC to start CDM. On feb 1, 1922, Gandhi threatened to launch CDM frok Bardoli(Guj) if: (i) political prisoners were not released, and (ii) press controls were not removed. The movement had hardly begun before it was brought to an abrupt end.

Chauri-Chaura Movt(Feb 5,1922)- police here had beaten up the leader of a group of volunteers campaigning against liquor sale and high food prices. The agitated crowd torched the police station with policemen inside who had taken shelter there; those who tried to flee were hacked to death and thrown back into the fire. Twenty-two policemen were killed. Gandhi immediately announced the withdrawal of the movement. Most of the nationalist leaders including C.R. Das, Motilal Nehru, Subhash Bose, Jawaharlal Nehru, however, expressed their bewilderment at Gandhi's decision to withdraw the movement. In March 1922, Gandhi was arrested and sentenced to six years in jail. He made the occasion memorable by a magnificent court speech: "I am here, therefore, to invite and submit cheerfully to the highest penalty that can be inflicted upon me for what in law is deliberate crime, and what appears to me to be the highest duty of a citizen."

Reasons for Withdrawal-Gandhi felt that people had not learnt or fully understood the method of non-violence. The movement was also showing signs of fatigue. This was natural as it is not possible to sustain any movement at a high pitch for very long. In November 1922, the people of Turkey rose under Mustafa Kamal Pasha and deprived the sultan of political power. Turkey was made a secular state. Thus, the Khilafat question lost its relevance.

Evaluation of Khilafat NCM-brought the urban Muslims into the national movement, but at the same time it communalised the national politics, to an extent. Nationalist sentiments reached every nook and corner of the country and politicised every strata of population—the artisans, peasants, students, urban poor, women, traders, etc. Now, the masses lost the hitherto all-pervasive fear of the colonial rule and its mighty repressive organs.
